Yes, today, Mutual Of New York offers you lower rates on larger amounts of insurance!

Just about everything these days is "cheaper by the dozen." Almost everywhere you shop, you can get lower rates on larger amounts. And now MONY brings this modern, money-saving principle to life insurance.

Right now, on nearly all types of life insurance for individuals, MONY offers you reduced rates on policies with face amounts of $5,000 to $10,000, and an even lower rate when the policy is for $10,000 or more. You save, just as you save when you buy the larger-size package at your grocery store. For examples of premium savings, see table below showing various rate reductions.

Delleu	Dete	How much less you pay
Policy Face Amount	Rate Reduction	in 10 Yrs'. Premiums	in 20 Yrs'. Premiums
$ 5,000	$1.25 per $1,000	$ 62.50	$125.00
7,000	1.25 per 1,000	87.50	175.00
10,000	2.00 per 1,000	200.00	400.00
15,000	2.00 per 1,000	300.00	600.00
20,000	2.00 per 1,000	400.00	800.00

HERE'S A NEW EASY WAY TO PAY!

If you have a regular checking account, you can arrange with many banks to have your monthly premium of $10 or more deducted automatically. This new plan is called "MONY-MATIC," and it actually costs you less than the usual method of paying premiums by the month.

If you need more life insurance, look into these money-saving ideas.

How to eat and enjoy it ...without getting fat

Is there such a thing as a "fattening" or a "reducing" food?

Should you give up any favorite food?

Why do the newer diets purposely include sugar?

Read these facts—and how sugar helps you control weight naturally.

Q. Have ideas about "fattening" foods changed?

A. Yes. It is now an accepted fact that no one food is "fattening" in itself, when eaten in sensible amounts. By the same token, there is no such thing as a "reducing" food. You needn't give up any food or beverage you enjoy.

Q. What makes people fat?

A. People get fat simply because they eat more of everything than they actually need. Individual needs vary, but all healthy persons need a balanced diet which comes from a variety of foods. That's why it's unwise to cut out any one food to reduce.

Q. Is there a safe diet for weight-conscious people?

A. The country's leading nutritionists say this: Eat the same foods you are accustomed to, in good variety. Simply go light on portions. You needn't give up any food or beverage you enjoy. This plan purposely includes sugar, both for its energy value, and as an aid in cutting down.

Q. How can sugar help you eat less?

A. You may remember when you were small, your mother wouldn't let you have a cookie or a piece of candy before a meal because you wouldn't eat all your dinner. Mother may not have known the scientific reason, but it is a fact that no other food stems the appetite faster than sugar. If you are trying to cut down on portions, a nibble of something sweet shortly before a meal may keep you from eating, at mealtime, far more calories than you need.

Q. What happens if you cut down too far?

A. You must remember that carbohydrate foods, such as sugar, are used primarily for energy—the kind of energy your body needs for every action, every heartbeat, every breath. When these foods are trimmed too drastically, nature sends out warning signals to slow down. You have a feeling of tiredness, of brain fag, even irritability.

Q. What if you have to keep going anyway?

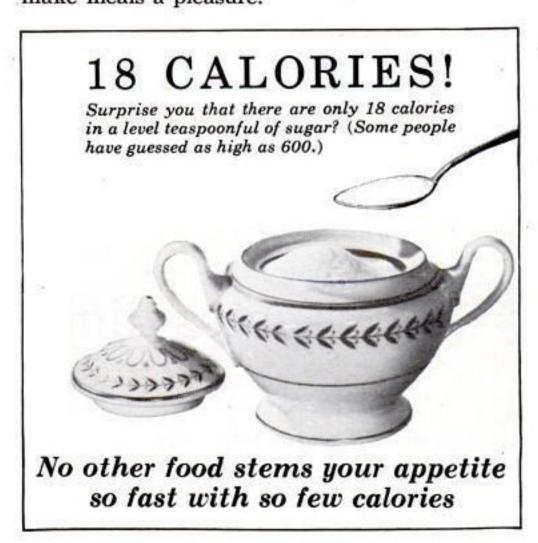

A. Nutritionists have found that an Energy Break helps in mid-morning or afternoon—a piece of candy, or a cookie or a beverage with sugar in it. This is what is meant by the "Scientific Nibble." Sugar is the quickest source of energy there is. Ounce for ounce, no other food supplies energy so fast, with so few calories.

Q. Would an artificial sweetener supply energy as fast?

A. No. Artificial sweeteners have no energy value whatsoever. What's more, they have little or no effect in weight reduction. In a 3-year study of overweight people by one of the nation's leading universities, it was found that people who gave up sugar and used artificial sweeteners lost no more weight than those who used sugar.

Q. How can I keep my weight down after I reduce?

A. If you start to gain, eat a little less. Again, nutritionists say, don't cut out any one food. You'll find sugar helpful not only for supplying energy, but as an appetite appeaser, too. You can live all your life with smaller portions if you feel satisfied and well, and enjoy the foods that make meals a pleasure.

ALWAYS felt simply "run down." People were thinking of me as a "spoilsport." I didn't know why until my doctor put me wise. He told me how a vitamin-mineral deficiency in my diet could bring on these symptoms-rob me of the joys of living . . . and suggested that I supplement my diet with pep-building vitamins and minerals. Thousands of others had found new energy, new youth, new happiness by adding these essential. factors to their diet.

Chedo Chuckovich

He's one of the few who got a second chance

"I AM CHEDO CHUCKOVICH, lucky to live in America.

"For I have also been Chedo Chuckovich, man without a country.

"I was born in Belgrade, Yugoslavia. My father was co-owner of the Serbian-

American National Bank. I had been educated in schools in France and Switzerland, and planned on a career in diplomacy.

"When I was 17, the Germans invaded my country. I fled with my family into the hills, and joined the guerrillas. My father was killed. My brother was killed. I was wounded and taken prisoner, and starved for five years in a Nazi concentration camp.

"Two weeks before the war's end, the Canadians freed me. My family was dead or scattered. Our property had been confiscated. The Communists had taken over Yugoslavia. I was a man without a country.

"But I was one of the lucky displaced persons.

CHEDO CHUCKOVICH: "I LEARNED THE HARD WAY YOU CAN'T TAKE YOUR FREEDOM FOR GRANTED."

Unlike so many of the others, I got to America, and a new start.

"Today I am in business for myself, a Union Oil dealer in Pacific Palisades, California. I have money in the bank, a home, a car. I have the respect of my neighbors. I have friends and a future again. I will soon be an American citizen.

"I will work at my citizenship because I learned the hard way you can't take it for granted. You have to earn it.

"I know, because I'm one of the few who got a second chance at freedom."

Chedo's life underlines a basic truth, we believe: Wherever men would remain free, they must remain alert.

For any concentration of power in the hands of a few—whether they be business men, financiers, industrialists, government officials or labor leaders—is, inevitably, at the expense of the majority.

Sumptuous Swedish Smorgasbord

THREE IMPORTED BLONDES COMPOSE VARIED FEAST FOR HOLLYWOOD

Down through the years no foreign country has spawned greater Hollywood stars than Sweden, which exported Anna Q. Nilsson in the silent era, Greta Garbo in the '20s and Ingrid Bergman in the '30s. Now another trio of young Swedish actresses has arrived on the scene, and three major film studios have signed them up in high hopes of developing still another Big Swede. Don Ornitz, a Hollywood free-lance photographer, was struck not only by the blond beauty that the three girls share but by the variety of their personalities. To him, Ingrid Goude exuded earthy wholesomeness, May Britt (see cover) looked impishly unpredictable and Inger Stevens displayed a country club polish. To record this variety, Ornitz decided to photograph each of the actresses in an appropriate California locale, and the result (next pages) is a highly delectable three-course smorgasbord.

COOL RESERVE of Inger Stevens is contrasted with warmth of candlelight as she dines on patio of a restaurant near Malibu Beach overlooking the Pacific Ocean. After coming to the U.S. in 1944, Inger appeared both on Broadway and on television, and is now costarred with Bing Crosby in her first film, Man on Fire.

PUCKISH GLANCE of May Britt emerges from Hollywood swimming pool. She has role opposite Marlon Brando in forthcoming movie, The Young Lions.

CAPTAIN ROMER IN HIS 1928 OCEANIC FOLDBOAT

ALONE AT SEA

Sirs:

In "Alone at Sea for 72 Days" (Life, July 22) you state, "Never before had the ocean been crossed in so small a craft with no outside help of any kind." You have overlooked the fact that already in the '20s another German had crossed the Atlantic in a foldboat, making his landfall off Cuba. On his trip from Cuba to Florida he disappeared in a hurricane.

ERNEST KOELLIKER

New York, N.Y.

• His name was Captain Franz Romer, 29, a German maritime captain who set out from Lisbon, Portugal on April 17, 1928 in a 21-foot foldboat. Fifty-eight days later he arrived at St. Thomas. He then set out for New York and was never heard from again.—ED.

Sirs:

What about the voyage of Captain William A. Andrews in the Sapolio in 1892? He crossed the Atlantic in a boat only 14½ feet long.

DAN SHIER

Golden, Colo.

◆ On June 21, 1891 Andrews and J. W. Lawlor left Boston in sail-boats to see who could reach Europe first. Lawlor, taking the northern route, reached England in 45 days. Andrews, heading for Spain, was picked up nine weeks later, still 600 miles short of his mark. A year later he sailed from Atlantic City to Palos, Spain in 84 days. Though shorter than Dr. Lindemann's 17-foot craft, Andrews' boat Sapolio had 2¾ feet more beam.—ED.

Sirs:

LIFE has now published the greatest adventure so far in its "Great Adventures" series.

Fighting innumerable natural obstacles, but most of all himself, Dr. Lindemann has shown that by neverfailing determination, a person willing to take chances and sacrifice much can achieve something infinitely greater than its cost.

EDITORIAL

Sirs:

Why all this furore about Girard ("Girard and the Larger Problem," Life, July 22)? Why are all the passions so much aroused in his case? It seems nobody wants to be quite candid about the subject because it is "too delicate" in our foreign relations.

The truth is that the American people resent submitting to Oriental justice because we consider it punitive justice below our own standards of conduct. If the same crime had been committed in England or Western Europe, the case more than likely would be of only academic interest to a few lawyers.

Chicago, Ill. S. Morpurgo

Sirs:

This case happened because of inefficiency in command and lack of discipline. If there is to be an investigation, it should be in the armed forces to learn how a Girard case could happen and to see that it does not happen again.

Traffic Officer Tells How!

Officer Edward Furmanek has been with the Chicago Police for over four years. He says: "I tried Bantron. In just one week I had lost every desire to smoke. Today, if I ever feel any desire to smoke, I take a Bantron instead!"

Here at last is a safe, new product, developed at a great American University, that has helped thousands stop smoking. In a series of clinical tests, published in a leading Medical Journal*, scientists reported that 4 out of 5 men and women who wanted to quit smoking stopped within 5 days when they took Bantron.

And the Bantron way is so easy and pleasant! Just take 3 Bantron tablets a day, after meals, for four days. Then only 2 a day until all desire to smoke leaves you. 80% are "Free" in 5 to 10 days.

COUNTER REVOLUTION

Millions of wise motorists buy auto insurance over the counter at Sears or at an Allstate Insurance Center

> And they often save more than 20%

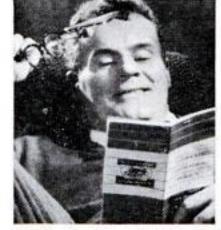

It is no accident that Allstate Insurance can be bought at Sears. Allstate was founded by Sears—on the same low-overhead, big volume, quality-for-less principle that made Sears famous for better values.

Better value with no fuss and feathers characterizes everything about Allstate.

For instance, we cut red tape in paying claims. Our adjusters all over the United States and Canada often write checks right "on the spot."

Our policies are printed in large type and plain language. You know exactly what you're buying.

Our streamlined operation results in lower rates. Savings of 22% are common; some folks save as much as 38% from rates charged by most other companies. In Texas, Allstate charges standard rates, but eligible policyholders have always saved through dividends.

With insurance rates rising, why not compare an Allstate policy with your present one? Visit a Sears store or Allstate Insurance Center. Or an Allstate Agent will be glad to call at your home. Just look up Allstate in your phone book.

One final thought: When you telephone us the first words you hear are "Allstate—how can we help you?" That's how we feel about our customers all the time...not just when we sell you a policy.

Your picture of a seal asleep in a pool ("Seal Beats Heat While Sound Asleep," LIFE, July 22) is handsome enough. The accompanying caption, however, is dead wrong. The ability to stay affoat while being sound asleep is not limited to seals.

VIEWING PARADE FROM AN ANGLE, MUSCOVITES CROWD TOP GIRDER OF KRYMSKY BRIDGE OVER MOSCOW RIVER AS MOROCCAN DELEGATION PASSES BY BELOW.

V.S.S.R. TEACHES—AND IS TAUGHT YOUTH FROM 102 LANDS SWARMS OVER MOSCOW

Like starlings on a fence, hundreds of Muscovites last week perched on a Moscow bridge to view a sight as extraordinary as the one they made. They were there for the big parade that opened the Sixth World Youth Festival, Communism's sugar-coated device for mass brainwashing of youngsters from everywhere. The mass of 30,000 visiting foreign youth was new and exciting to Muscovites for, though previous festivals have been held in satellite cities, it was the big picnic's first stand in Moscow.

Moscow put on a show. The city fathers swept the streets, painted the fronts—but not the backs—of buildings, strung the town with 800,000 lights, ordered the people to wash and $20 million. Encouraged to dress gaily and not to shun low necklines, Moscow's girls grew fragrant with "Lights of the Kremlin" perfume, freely bestowed comradely kisses and eagerly besought Western guests for lessons in rock 'n' roll. The visitors responded in kind: the Red Chinese with dragon dances, the British with kilted bagpipers, the Brazilians with sambas, the Israelis with "hora" circle dances.

This fantastic outpouring of "Mir i druzhba" (peace and friendship) was, as usual, arranged by two Red-front tools, the International Union of Students and the World Federation of Democratic Youth. Their invitations—which brought in 160 Americans (pp. 26, 27)—carried a tasty come-on: a two-week round trip from London, including all expenses, cost only $135. The subsidy was financed by a "solidarity fund," ostensibly raised by youth itself but actually by the Kremlin.

Observing fraternization and free political arguments, Life Correspondent Flora Lewis, an expert on the satellites, wondered who was most influencing whom. She remembered that "smothered sparks of unrest began exploding in the Communist world" right after the Warsaw festival of 1955 and she talked to a Pole in Moscow last week who told her, "I wonder if Khrushchev realizes what he is risking."

A MIXED U.S. GROUP, SOME PLAIN TALKING

The easy camaraderie permitted for the festival surprised visitors but left Russians breathless with a taste of forgotten freedom. To LIFE Correspondent Lewis it seemed "the sheer presence of foreigners made more impression than their words. Wherever delegates appeared, the Russians thronged—to see how they dressed, how they chattered and laughed, how they sang, how they danced, how they flirted."

The freedom was not only physical—though that was interrupted when police occasionally chased Russian girls away from delegate hotels. It was also psychological and Russians used it gladly to talk to outsiders about their deepest worries. Speaking of the Kremlin's recent shakeup, they mused, "Maybe it was right. . . . What have the ones up there now done to show that they are better? I wonder what it was really all about."

"No one knows," Flora Lewis cabled, "if the youngsters who poked their fingers into the strange waters of free, controversial discussion will shake off the droplets and remember again to watch their words and shy from strangers. For a moment the festival punched myriad holes in the Iron Curtain. They were just big enough to show that Soviet youth is stirred with uncertainty, gnawed with curiosity, restless with unknown desires."

For one, a girl shoemaker who was taken to an American party, the hole was almost like Alice's looking glass into Wonderland. "Oh, wait till I tell my family," she exclaimed. "But I know they won't believe me; it's too amazing." When she was offered an invitation card for evidence, she wailed, "They'll never believe I was really here. They'll say I picked it up on the street."

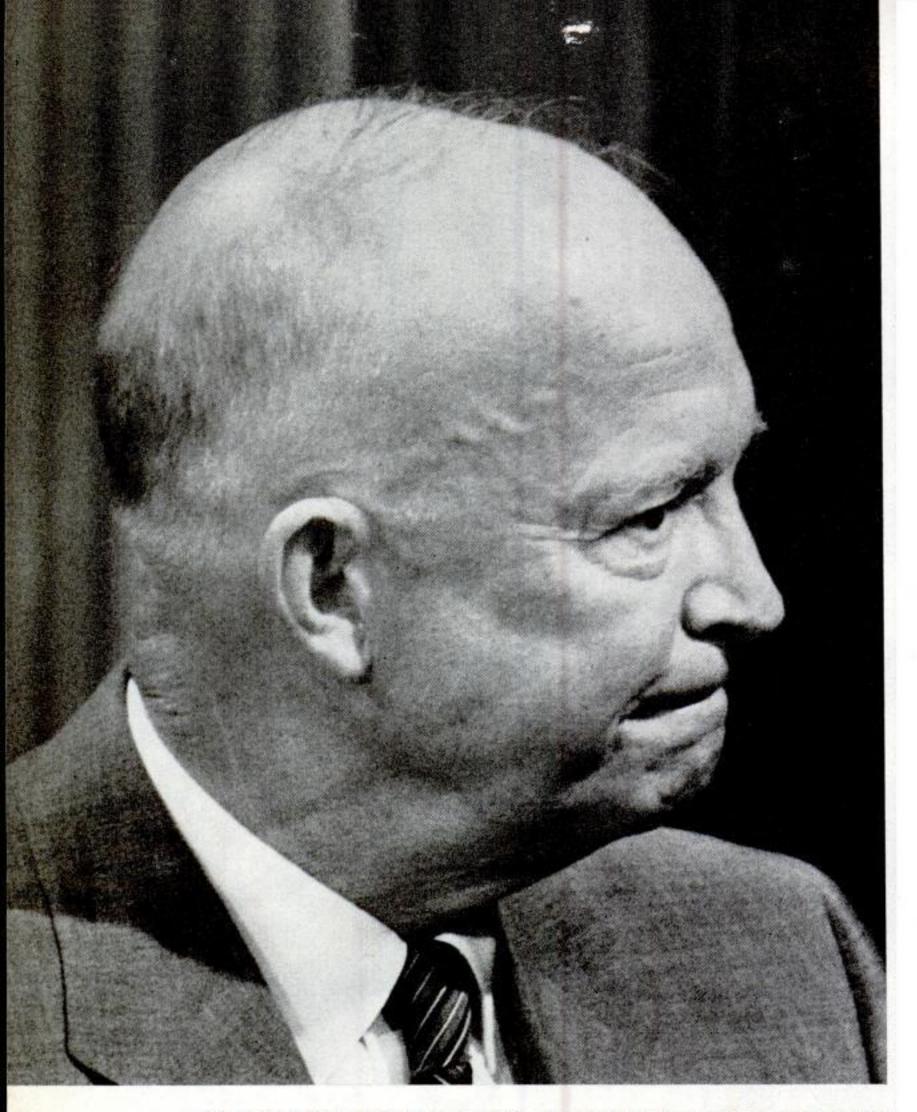

To the Americans, who had come by various routes and for several reasons, such childlike wonder had a parallel in their own feelings. Although they enjoyed the spectacle, they had to worry about making a pro-Communist spectacle of themselves. They were a mixed group, some bargain hunters, some curiosity-seekers, some fellow travelers. All of them went despite a State Department warning that the festival was a propaganda gimmick.

was a propaganda gimmick.

Some Americans served Red purposes with "folk song" parodies like I Ain't Gonna Study War No More, and one, Jerry Fiederer of New York, called Nikita Khrushchev "fatherly." But not all Americans were misguided: George Abrams of Newton, Mass. went about reading the U.N. report on the rape of Hungary to any Russian who would listen—and many did. And Miss Lewis overheard an American youth discussing democracy with a Russian in a busload of Americans. When the Americans voted eight to two on their destination, the American said to the Russian, "Now what should we do with the minority-throw them out of the bus like Malenkov and Molotov? See what I mean?" The Russian pondered a while, then said, "I see."

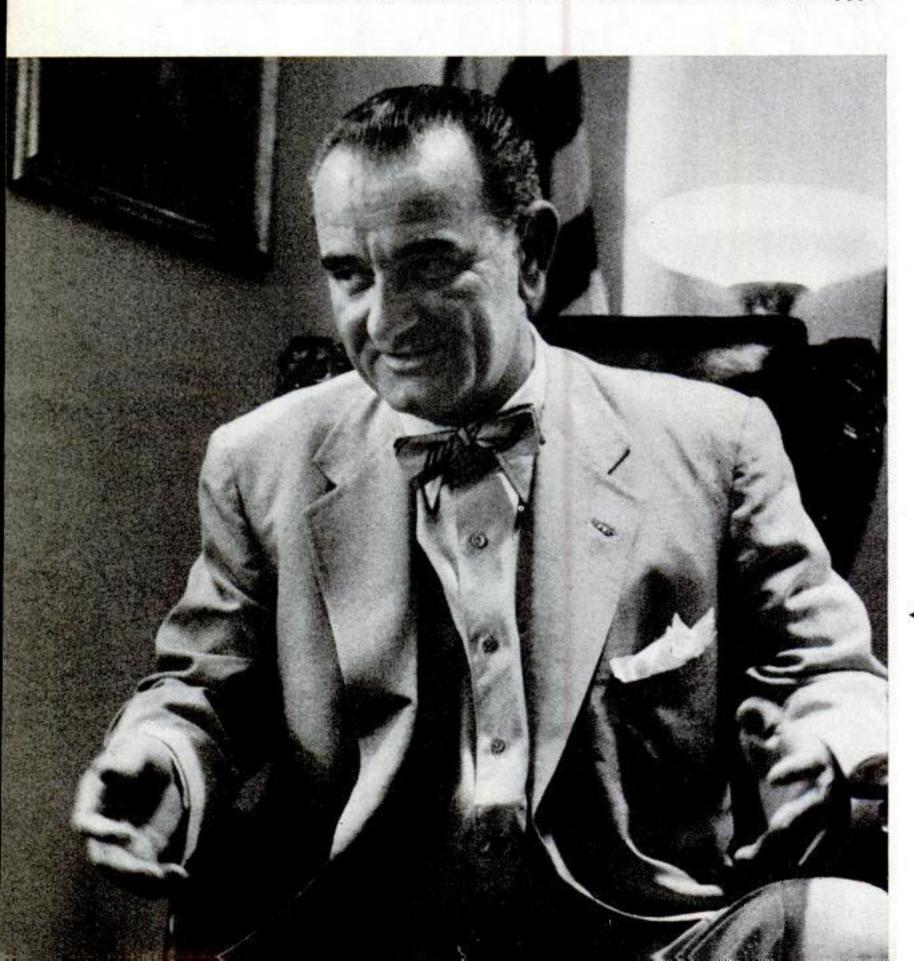

AMERICANS ON PARADE are headed by a selfappointed leader, Jake Rosen of New York, who irritated some of his fellow Americans by dipping the flag to Khrushchev. By a close vote, the American banner was cautiously edited from its original wording of "USA Delegation Salutes VI World Festival."

AN ANGRY PRESIDENT ABOUT TO BE ANGRIER

President Eisenhower was boiling mad at his press conference. At a Senate hearing on his nomination as ambassador to Ceylon, Businessman Maxwell Gluck could not even name Ceylon's prime minister. Had the President known Gluck was a heavy contributor to the Republican party? "I don't take it very kindly as suggesting I would be influenced by such things," he said. Later, he was even angrier when the Senate passed a crippling jury trial amendment to the civil rights bill. After a visit with the President, Senator Charles Potter described him as "damn unhappy."

A LOOK AT THE

← A SMUG SENATOR AFTER HIS TRIUMPH

In contrast to President Eisenhower, Senator Lyndon Johnson, leader of the Democratic coalition that put the amendment across, exulted in its passage. Expected to clear the Senate this week, the bill must be approved by the House and is subject to Presidential veto. Whatever the outcome, it is bound to be a major factor in 1958 and 1960, when Republicans hope to cut into the northern city vote by having championed a stronger bill.

WORLD'S WEEK

AN AMERICAN MEMORIAL IN RUNNYMEDE MEADOW

In the meadow at Runnymede where 742 years ago King John reluctantly granted his barons their historic charter of law and liberty, the American Bar Association took time from its London convention (LIFE, Aug. 5) to dedicate an American memorial to Magna Carta (see Editorial). As more than 5,000 watched, bar association officials walked to a rotunda which was built with funds contributed by American lawyers. There they unveiled a simple granite slab with the inscription: "To Commemorate Magna Carta: Symbol of Freedom Under Law."

AREA OF QUAKE, shown in the diagram, was affected by a movement of hot lava in a subterranean volcanic reservoir. Such shifts make themselves felt at weak points in earth's crust, the faults (heavy diagonal lines). Along Chilpancingo fault the earth shifted, producing shock waves which radiated outward.

THE EARTH TREMBLES, THEN MEXICO SUFFERS

All during the previous day, keepers at the Mexico City Zoo noticed that the animals seemed strangely restless. In the streets an occasional dog howled woefully, sensing the trembling that was as yet too slight for people to notice. Then in the early hours of Sunday morning, disaster struck as Mexico was shaken like jelly by one of the worst earthquakes in the country's history. The tremors originated near Acapulco and Chilpancingo (see drawing above), and seismographs recorded their strength at grade 10, just two grades below total destruction. Acapulco, a well-built resort, was only slightly damaged. But in Chilpancingo (pop. 8,830) a third of the houses were down and six were dead.

The greatest toll, however, came in heavily populated Mexico City, 135 miles away. As the earth trembled, a panicked populace poured out of homes and hotels to be greeted by a hail of glass, marble and concrete that cascaded from shaking buildings. Statues toppled from their pedestals and water pipes broke everywhere. Rushing from home with her baby, one woman turned just in time to see her husband and four other children entombed under its toppling walls. A new apartment house collapsed completely, burying 12 families. Rescue workers combed the rubble for the living, and quickly order was restored. But the disaster's final toll was heavy: 71 dead, 657 injured, an untold number unaccounted for.

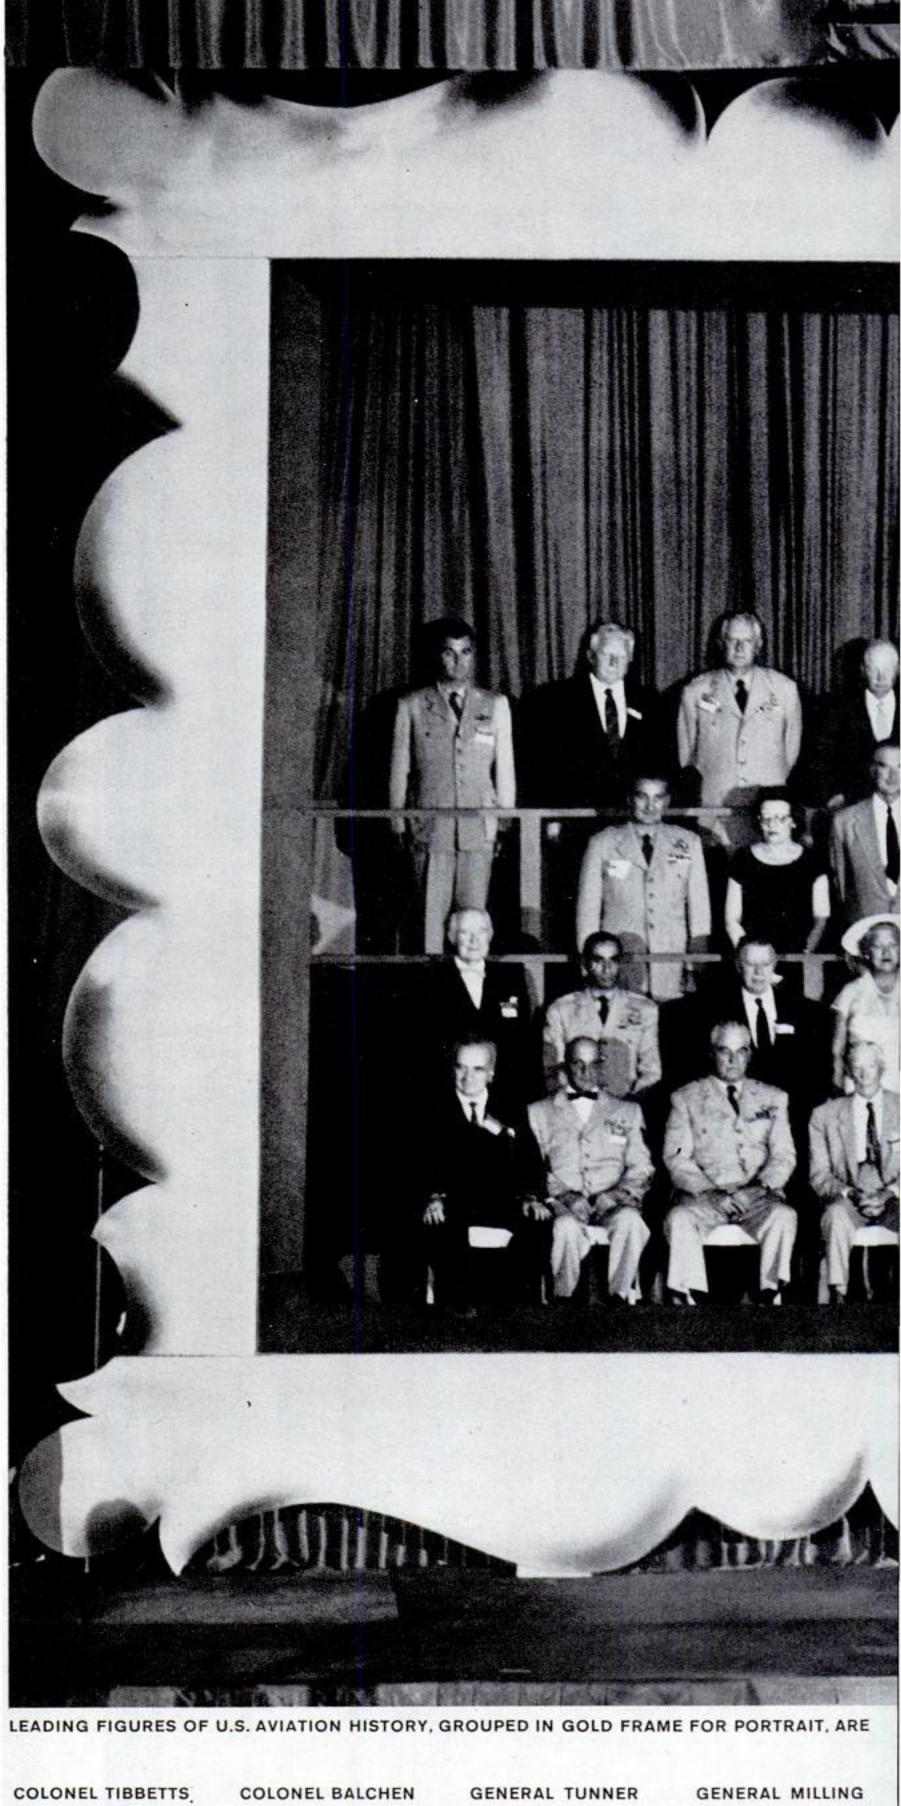

FOOT OF A LANDMARK, the gilded angel that stood atop Mexico City's monument to independence, is carried off for safekeeping after quake shattered statue.

U.S. AIRPOWER IN 50th YEAR

Parties, portrait mark birthday

U.S. military aviation got its unimpressive start on Aug. 1, 1907 when the Army appointed a captain and two enlisted men to oversee "all matters pertaining to military ballooning, air machines and kindred subjects." Last week in Washington the Air Force, which separated from the Army in 1947 and now has 925,000 men and officers on duty, joined hands with the Air Force Association, its alumni group, to celebrate its 50th anniversary.

The birthday party lasted all week and included a champagne reception, three formal balls, an air show and a banquet at which 29 leading aviation figures, whose combined careers have spanned the 50 years, posed for a gigantic birthday portrait (left). The oldest military pilot in the group, Brig. General Frank Lahm, 79, pinned Air Force wings onto the tunic of the newest pilot, 2nd Lieut. Dennis LaFarlette, 21. "After a lifetime in aviation," said Lahm, "I know it isn't safe even to try to predict what will happen in the next 50 years."

EXTRA POLICE STAND GUARD AT ENTRANCE TO THE PARK BUILDING NEAR WHICH YOUTH WAS MURDERED

TEEN-AGE BURST OF BRUTALITY

In the hot evenings teen-age gangs moved restlessly through New York City's streets. Police patrols watched warily for signs of juvenile trouble that becomes a boiling threat each midsummer. Suddenly last week violence broke out in three scattered sections of the city. On Manhattan's upper West Side a youth was fatally stabbed and his friend critically wounded. In Brooklyn a 16-year-old was savagely beaten by a wandering gang. And in the Bronx a boy was killed by teen-age attackers. In the heat of the tension police quickly bore down on known gangs, and station houses in the city were filled with solemn-faced suspects, some of them only 12 and 13 years old.

The biggest police catch found some sullen members of the "Egyptian Kings" (above right) accused of the West Side killing of 15-yearold Michael Farmer, who was handicapped by a polio-weakened leg. Farmer and a friend were attacked when they walked into territory disputed by the Kings and a rival group, the "Jesters" (bottom right).

To check other disputes that could erupt into murderous assaults, police youth squads gave warnings to gang leaders, and patrols were heavily increased to "saturate" trouble spots. But Deputy Police Commissioner Walter Arm, noting that juvenile crime in New York City had risen 41%, was not optimistic. "It's like fighting a forest fire," he commented. "You don't know where it's going to spring up next."

SMIRKING SUSPECT, Louis Alvarez, 16, a leader of "Egyptian Kings" gang, sits in car on way to questioning in murder. "He's a bad boy," his father said, "but I never thought he'd kill anybody."

LIBERTY IN LAW, HOW WE GOT IT...

On a great meadow called Runnymede, near Windsor, one June morning in A.D. 1215 the rebellious bishops and barons of England awaited the arrival of oppressive King John to sign the concessions they had forced him to grant. On the same meadow last fortnight hundreds of American lawyers and their families watched the unveiling of an eight-columned monument of Portland stone, gift of the American bar, on the spot where King John put his royal seal to Magna Carta.

Both gift and visit were fitting since, for America, as for all true democracies, Magna Carta is the fountainhead of liberty under law. Yet why is this so? How many today have ever read the Magna Carta? How many know what is in it? The modern reader could scrutinize every one of its 61 clauses—ranging from relief for those who "shall have borrowed money from the Jews" to a promise to remove entirely "all fish weirs . . . from the Thames and Medway"—without finding much more than limited and special favors for a few. Nor did the rebels who extracted them seek much more. They only half understood, as Winston Churchill observed in his A History of the English-Speaking Peoples (Life, April 2, 1956) that they were groping "in the dim light toward a fundamental principle," namely, that "here is a law which is above the King and which even he must not break."

Magna Carta established no "inalienable rights" of man. Even four centuries later King James I could hang a thief without trial and Sir John Harington could write: "... our new King hath hanged one man before he was tried; 'tis strangely done: now if the winde bloweth thus, why may not a man be tried before he hath offended?" It was at the risk of their own necks that such great 17th Century pioneers of the law as Sir Edward Coke asserted such rights, but they built on the precedent of Runnymede in doing so. More than a century later still other brave men, calling themselves Americans, had to risk the gallows of another English sovereign to rear an oak of freedom out of the same tiny seedling of Runnymede. Even now it is necessary for one branch of that tree—the Supreme Court—to protect these rights from new encroachments. The lesson is plain: freedom is never fully won, but only a living, growing law prevents its extinction; Magna Carta provided a principle capable of infinite extension.

But how far has it been extended? Few people, taking their rights for granted, realize to how little of the rest of the world a true rule of law has spread. Communists prate nervously about "socialist legality" but their actions seem indistinguishable from those of Peter the Great, who, on visiting Westminster hall in 1697, was astonished when told that all the busy men crowding it in wigs and gowns were lawyers. "Why," he exclaimed, "I have but two in my whole dominion and I believe I shall hang one of them the moment I get home." His remark seems as modern as today's headlines; the daily sentences of the Budapest "courts" symbolize the mockery of a rule of law perverted.

But the events in Hungary and Poland also demonstrate, as Britain's Lord Chancellor, Lord Kilmuir, told the visiting American lawyers last week, that the thirst for justice is "inseparable from the human condition" and cannot be permanently suppressed. It has already forced, in Poland, greater rights for individuals, and the ripples from this stir a demand for them in Russia itself. Time thus seems to be working toward a wider spread of a rule of law.

In fact, Attorney General Herbert Brownell told the London meetings (Life, Aug. 15) the time has come when the attempt should be made to establish a system of tribunals which would have compulsory jurisdiction over international disputes. A beginning could be made among those nations which have similar legal systems—Britain, the U.S., Latin America. "The emphasis in international life must shift from torts to contracts," Brownell said. "We must establish an era where nations as well as individuals are subject to justice under law."

The echoes of Runnymede still ring.

... AND HOW WE CAN EXTEND IT

Decades may be required to achieve universal adherence to a rule of law (see above). But if it is ever achieved it will grow as the fruits of Magna Carta grew, out of the gradual accretions of precedent. In a lawless world, crimes of states against people are too numberless to name and the world is helpless to prevent or punish them. But there are two such notorious outrages, at the moment, in which concrete steps actually can be taken to help advance the rule of law. We refer to the apparent abduction of Dr. Jesús de Galíndez to the Dominican Republic and the unjust imprisonment of Milovan Djilas of Yugoslavia.

The Galíndez case is well known. Life (Feb. 25) itself first marshaled the evidence which indicated strongly that Galíndez, hated and feared by Dictator Trujillo, was kidnaped in New York, flown out by an American charter pilot, Gerald Lester Murphy—and that Murphy, at least, was subsequently murdered. In the case of Djilas, the former number three man in Tito's Communist regime dared not only to denounce Soviet repression in Hungary (as Tito himself did) but also to assert in an article written for the U.S. magazine New Leader that it marked "the beginning of the end" of Communism. For this he was imprisoned after a secret trial where no witnesses were even called. His offense: free speech.

What can be done to advance justice in these cases? Congressman Charles Porter of Oregon, who got interested in the Galindez case because Pilot Murphy is from Oregon, has just toured Latin America and come back with a concrete program. He bases it on two facts: the Organization of American States has been losing prestige, and the U.S. has been losing confidence among democratic-minded Latin Americans because of its support of dictators like Trujillo. An existing treaty between the U.S. and the Dominican Republic, says Porter, makes it juridically feasible to refer the Galíndez dispute—e.g., Trujillo's refusal to allow interrogation of his ex-New York consul—for adjudication by the O.A.S. To do so would strengthen the O.A.S., which is already an outpost of international law.

The case of Milovan Djilas emphasizes again the crying need for international agreements pledging respect for the rights of all persons to free speech, open trials by juries, and the writ of habeas corpus. No such rights exist in Yugoslavia, although Tito tries to convince free world opinion he is moving in the direction of democracy.

What is needed here is a world-wide outcry for "justice for Djilas," as persistent and tireless as that which the Communists organized—spuriously—for the Rosenberg spies. Tito is anxious to have the good opinion of British Laborites, of European socialists, of American liberals. All such groups ought to get started in relentless, drum-fire worldwide bombardment of petitions, letters and resolutions which will never let Tito forget that, until Djilas is free, Titoland will be suspected of Stalinism.

Let those who wish to advance the cause of law move now to prosecute Trujillo and Tito before world public opinion.

LAST PUBLIC APPEARANCE of Guatemalan President Carlos Castillo Armas, three hours before his assassination, found him in the National Palace addressing a seminar to boost private enterprise.

LATIN MARTYR TO A MADMAN

Guatemala mourns its president

President Carlos Castillo Armas of Guatemala was a unique—and in some ways peerless—figure in Latin American politics. Amid the almost senseless procession of Latin American coups, Castillo Armas staged his 1954 revolt for principle. He liberated his country from the pro-Communist regime of Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán, thereby breaking up Moscow's most dangerous invasion of the Western Hemisphere. Then Castillo Armas, backed by the U.S., gave Guatemala a sound hope for economic progress and democratic rule.

Last month, tragically, the lunatic strain in Latin politics caught up with sensible Castillo Armas. A psychotic member of the presidential guard suddenly fired a bullet into his chest and he died on the spot.

As the hemisphere mourned Castillo Armas' loss, his work for the moment seemed secure: amid its grief Guatemala stayed politically calm.

A TAMER REBEL COMES HOME

For 33 years Peru's Víctor Raúl Haya de la Torre had been a symbol of liberal revolutionary zeal in Latin America. He fought for agrarian reform and the eighthour day, quarreled with the Catholic Church and opposed dictators. Since 1949 he had lived in political asylum at home or exile abroad. But Haya never lost his hold on the masses of Peru, where his APRA party somehow survived. Then in 1956 Manuel Prado was elected president with the understanding that Haya could return. Two weeks ago Haya came home to a wild welcome (below). But he had lost some of his former zeal. He spoke warmly of the APRA's new policy of convivencia, which means peaceful coexistence with church and government.

WORLD'S FASTEST RACE WON ON

The International "500" at Monza, Italy, became the world's safest race, too—on Firestones. It provides new proof of the safety and performance you enjoy when you put Firestone Tires on your car.

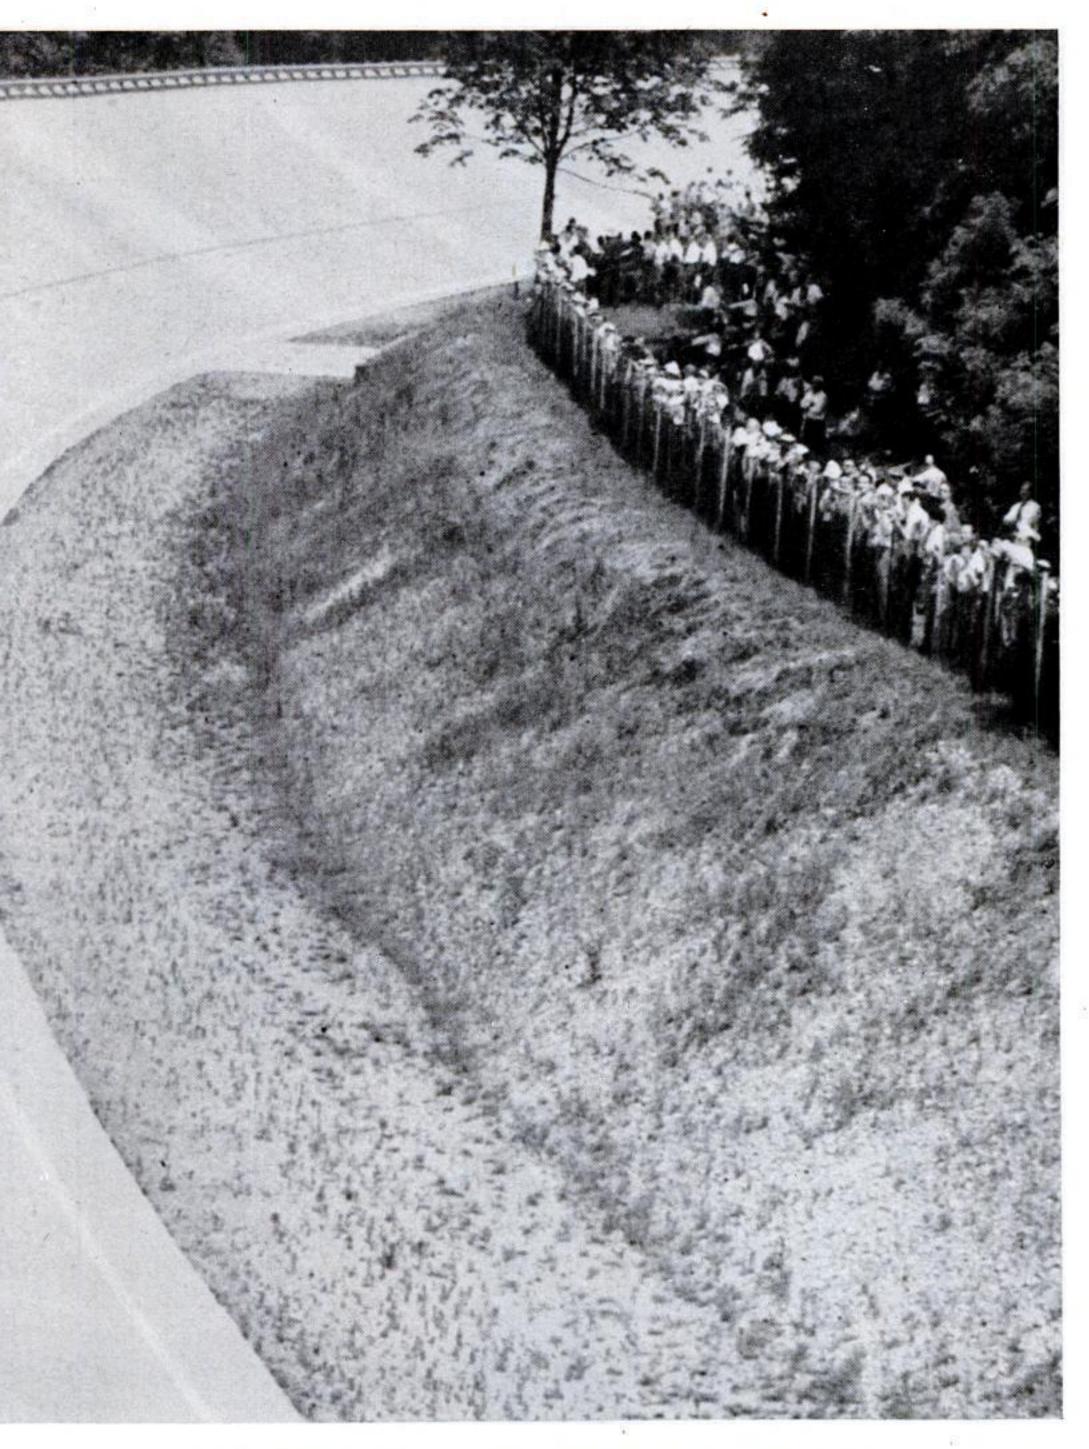

On June 29, Jimmy Bryan became the winner of the first International "500" when he streaked around the last lap at Monza with a 500-mile average speed of 160.057 mph. The best drivers in the world, plus every make of tire and car, were eligible to compete. Yet American drivers finished first, second, and third, rolling on Firestone Tires.

The International "500" is the world's fastest race, and one look at the track will tell you why. The curves are so steeply banked that drivers can take them at much faster speeds and thus maintain a higher average for as long as tires and cars can take the grueling pace. The straightaways are long and fast. And even though they're concrete-paved, at 190 mph they slapped tires and cars with a force that shattered shock absorbers, shook gas tanks loose, even snapped frames.

You couldn't have set up a race that's tougher on tires, where top lap speeds run as high as 40 mph faster than the winning Indianapolis "500" average. You couldn't even have picked a hotter day—the track temperature stood at a tire-torturing 128°. So it's only natural that all the American drivers in the race chose Firestone Tires. For they have learned from experience that

FIRESTONE TIRES!

Firestone knows more than anyone in America about building strength and safety into tires. These top professionals know these facts because they spend their lives where Firestone does its testing and reigns supreme—on the oval laboratories of racing.

The fact that Firestone has now gained an international reputation for safety should make one important fact crystal clear to every automobile driver in America: Only Firestone Tires give you the safety and built-in peace of mind that comes from years of grueling speedway experience.

New Firestone Nylon'500"

WITH NUCLEAR-CONTROLLED
NYLON CORD BODY

Before you decide to buy any new tires, there are a few things you ought to know about the new Firestone Nylon "500."

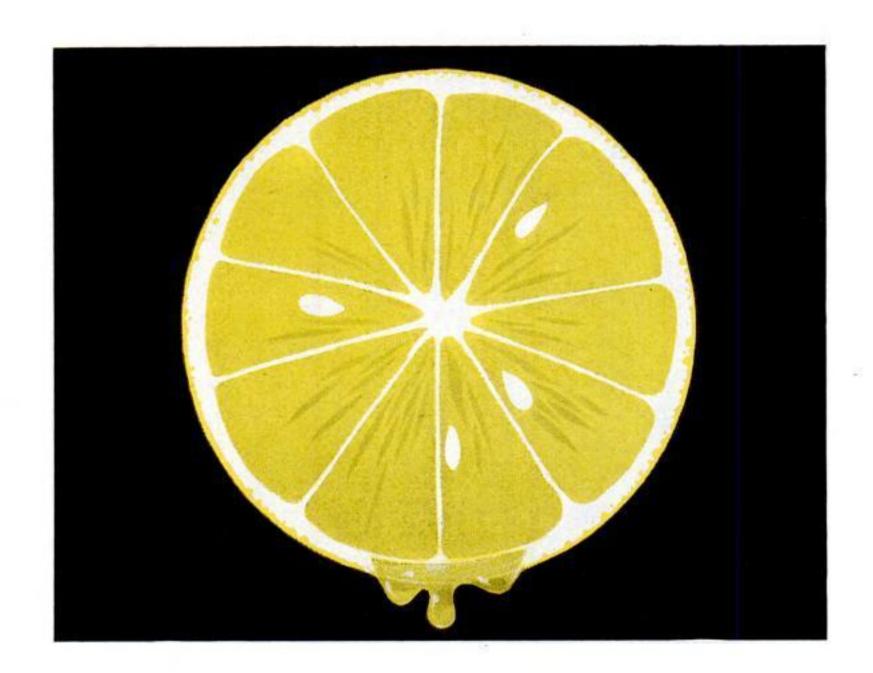

First, you ought to find out how tough it is—how it's been made nylon-tough to withstand the pounding of the city's deepest chuckholes and the country's roughest roads.

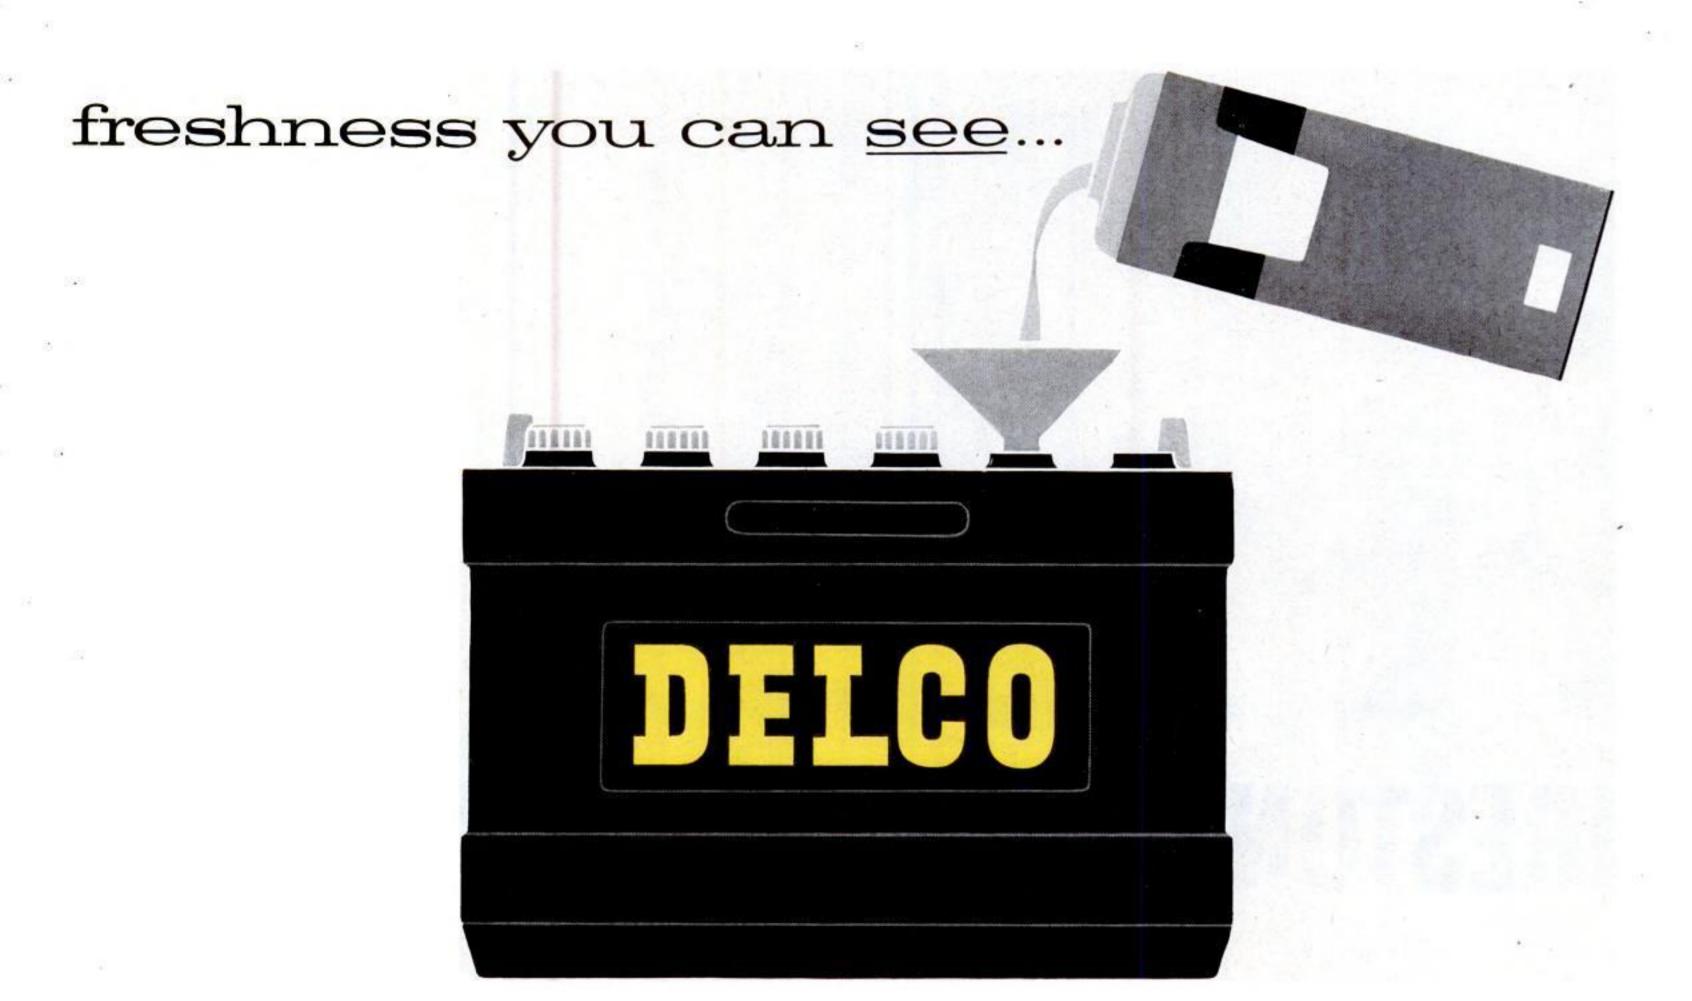

You should remember that Firestone engineers borrowed from their own speedway tire specifications to develop a cooler running rubber compound for this tire, to give you a new kind of protection against the incredible heat that sustained superhighway driving builds up inside a tire.

You ought to discover the thousands of extra miles that are built into its deep-design tread, and its unmatched non-skid safety.

In short, you ought to get all the facts about the new Firestone Nylon "500" tires—how little they cost, how wonderfully safe they are. And you can get the story about the tires and the easy terms that go with them from your Firestone Dealer or Store. Or order them on your new car from your car dealer.

THE WOOLLY AVAHI, A RARE LEMUR ONLY A FOOT TALL, HAS OWLISH EYES AND WITCHLIKE HANDS WITH HUGE THUMBS AND FINGERS OF IRREGULAR LENGTHS

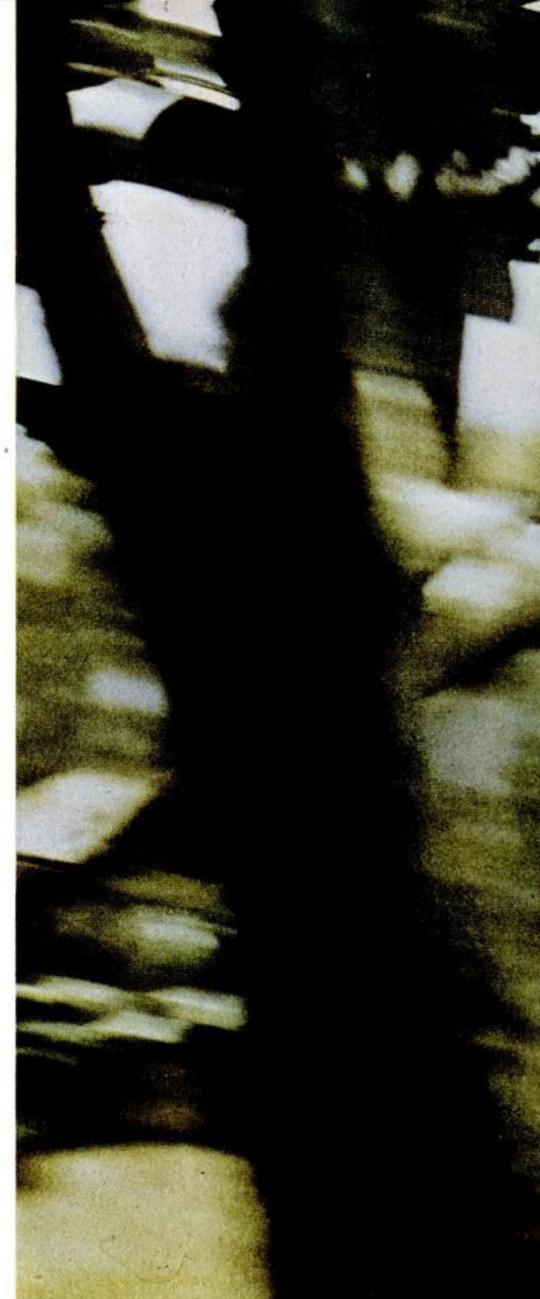

The Gentle Lemurs

ODD ASSORTMENT OF PRIMATES HAS EVOLVED ON MADAGASCAR

Lemurs always wear a wide-eyed and wistful look, yet no group of animals seems to get more enjoyment out of life than they do. Living in Madagascar at the top of the tall forest trees, they spend their time rocketing after one another among the branches, lying relaxed along a limb or feeding off leaves, bark and fruit.

Lemurs have led peaceful lives on the island ever since they came there some 40 million years ago, a period when the ancestors of lemurs abounded almost everywhere in the world. The most primitive members of the primate family, lemurs began to find life hard as more intelligent primates—apes and monkeys—developed. It is generally believed that, pushed from their homes, some retreated across Africa and reached Madagascar when it was still part of the continent. Soon after they arrived—and before more aggressive primates could get across—the island became separated from Africa by a deep channel and, unmolested in their island refuge, the gentle lemurs evolved into a great variety of odd-looking species, which Life's Loomis Dean photographed in their Madagascar habitat. But today civilization is pushing back the lemurs' forest home so rapidly that zoologists fear the animals, in a few decades, will become extinct.

RING-TAILED LEMUR has a two-foot-long brushy tail (left) which it rubs against its forearm glands,

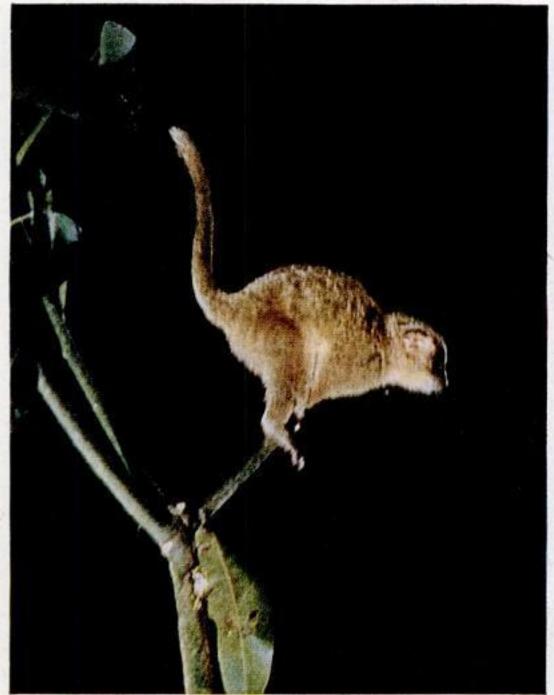

LESSER MOUSE LEMUR is nocturnal. By day it curls up and sleeps in tiny hollow stems or tree holes especially when angry or excited. It uses this tail as a balancer in jumping (above), as an ornament held straight in the air when walking on all fours, as a warmer wrapped around its neck at night. Most common of the lemurs, the inquisitive ring-tailed is the one most often seen in zoos and sold as pets.

(left) and gives shrill vent to its feelings if disturbed. By night it runs, with great speed, and leaps through slender tree branches in search of insects and fruit. Smallest of all primates, the mouse lemur is only five inches long with a six-inch tail. It is difficult to capture and the adults have mean dispositions.

SIFIKA LEMURS, which have distinctive silky hair, in captivity come to ground to play and to feed off vegetation and fruit. With their forearms outstretched before them (top left), they move in long jumps on their elongated hind legs with tremendous clawed feet as they chase one another like clowns (lower left) or carry their young from one tree to another (center and right). At 3 months of age this dark-headed baby still clings to its mother's stomach when traveling about, but will soon be riding piggyback. Sifikas live in groups and most frequently call to one another by a series of short hiccups. If alarmed, however, they bark hoarsely.

LANGUID LEMUR, the red-ruffed variety, relaxes in the morning sun, a habit which causes the natives superstitiously to believe that it worships the sun and therefore is sacred. Wildest and largest (four feet long) of the lemurs, it fills the deep, quiet forests with full-bodied roars which make it seem deceptively fierce.

STUDY FOR SURVIVAL

Worried by the steady decline of Madagascar's lemurs, the Paris Natural History Museum and the International Union for Conservation of Nature recently sponsored a study by two French zoologists, Jean-Jacques Petter and his wife. The Petters spent a year tramping through the forests, collecting 32 kinds of lemurs and observing the elusive creatures in their last remaining haunts. They studied eating habits, breeding and raising of young of both the wild and captive animals. As a result of their forthcoming report, much more will be known about a dwindling species, and the Petters will recommend better protective measures that may help prevent the lemurs from vanishing altogether.

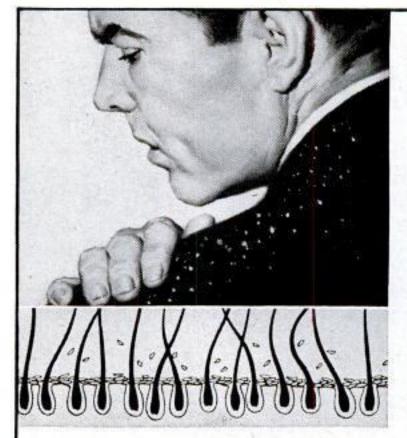

RARE AYE-AYE, a member of the lemur family, was photographed by Petters for the first time in its forest home after several night expeditions to find it.

Clears up the severest dandruff and itchy scalp

...with just 3 applications!

Shampoos, tonics, ordinary preparations remove loose dandruff but leave a scaly crust of dead cells on your scalp to form new flakes in less than a week.

Theradan with Sarthionate penetrates the scaly crust and lifts it off—leaves your scalp free from dandruff and related itching for 1 month to 4 months!

Bristol-Myers' new Theradan works beneath the surface, not just on it... penetrates and removes layers of dead, dandruff-forming cells to leave the scalp free from scales and related itching... to stop new dandruff before it starts!

Like any Man or woman who suffers from dandruff, you may doubt that it can be controlled—much less eliminated for long periods.

But Theradan is not just a tonic—not a preparation you use every day or every week—not a shampoo you wash right out. It's a new kind of medical treatment, containing penetrating Sarthionate.

Unlike so-called "dandruff-treatment" shampoos, Theradan stays on the scalp long enough for the medicine to do its work—usually from ½ hour to 1 hour before shampooing. In a very severe case, it can stay on as long as needed.

Theradan goes far beyond ordinary preparations that only remove loose dandruff. Such preparations can't penetrate the scaly layer of dead cells that sticks to the scalp and keeps forming new dandruff flakes. Theradan gently loosens this layer and removes it from your scalp. Thus Theradan frees your scalp from scales and itching-kills scalp germs, stops dandruff before it starts!

In 20 months of testing by skin specialists, Theradan was completely effective in dandruff cases so severe that even strong prescription remedies failed to give adequate relief. With Theradan, none of these men and women had dandruff again for 1 month to 4 months.

When you have cleared up itchy dandruff with Theradan, use it occasionally —as many people do—just to prevent recurrence. Get Theradan today.

SHELL FROM A TO Z - AN ALPHABET

Galaxy

Blast off! Shell's UMF® rocket fuel sends a needle-nosed giant from Earth toward the stars. Today, gasoline in your car carries you stars. Today, gasoline in your car carries you far — comfortably and economically. Tomorrow, a Shell fuel will take you and your family — where?

Gasoline tax

Like everything else it keeps on going up. Currently, the national average is 40% tax on every gallon — four times the 10% luxury tax on mink coats. One thing to watch for: that your taxes work for you to improve and extend our road systems.

OF GOOD THINGS ABOUT PETROLEUM

Go-devil

It's a long steel and rubber contraption, equipped with wire brushes, that scrubs through a pipeline to help keep it free from corrosion. It's effective even in pipelines big enough for a man to crawl through. Now Shell has another way; new Scip — a kind of liquid go-devil that works easier, faster, cheaper.

Gun

One shoots bullets, the other lubricates your car. Shell supplies antirust lubricants that keep this pistol shooting straight. And, of course, Shell supplies the right kinds of grease and oil for your car, too. Shell — a good name for any kind of lubricating job.

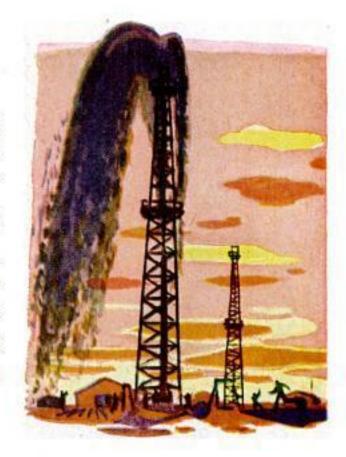

Goldilocks

Squirt! She keeps her crowning glory neat and lustrous with one of the new hair sprays. Shell Chemical's ethyl alcohol helps to make these sprays practical. A shining example of how oil products research finds a better way.

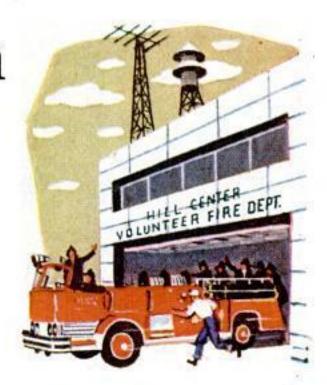

Gusher

One of the oil industry's pet hates — it's gone the way of the dodo bird. A gusher is old-fashioned, wasteful. Today, even when drilling under 50 feet of water, automatic equipment prevents gushers. Modern controls bring you oil more efficiently at less cost, make vital oil reserves last longer.

Good citizen

Thousands of Shell employees serve their communities as volunteer firemen, auxiliary policemen, town councilmen—even mayors (4 of them from one refinery!). Whatever it takes to be a good citizen—they've got it. And Shell is proud we've got them!

Tive it everything you've got. It's the kind of unspoken phrase that characterizes people and ideas in the free enterprise system. It helps account for the tremendous growth of the economy as a whole—and for Shell in particular.

In a decade, Shell has doubled refinery capacity, quadrupled sales, tripled assets. And because we are an integrated company of specialists, we follow through from well to you with pride and a sense of responsibility at every step of the way. All these things combine to bring you oil's 1001 good things more efficiently, more quickly, more economically.

Growing

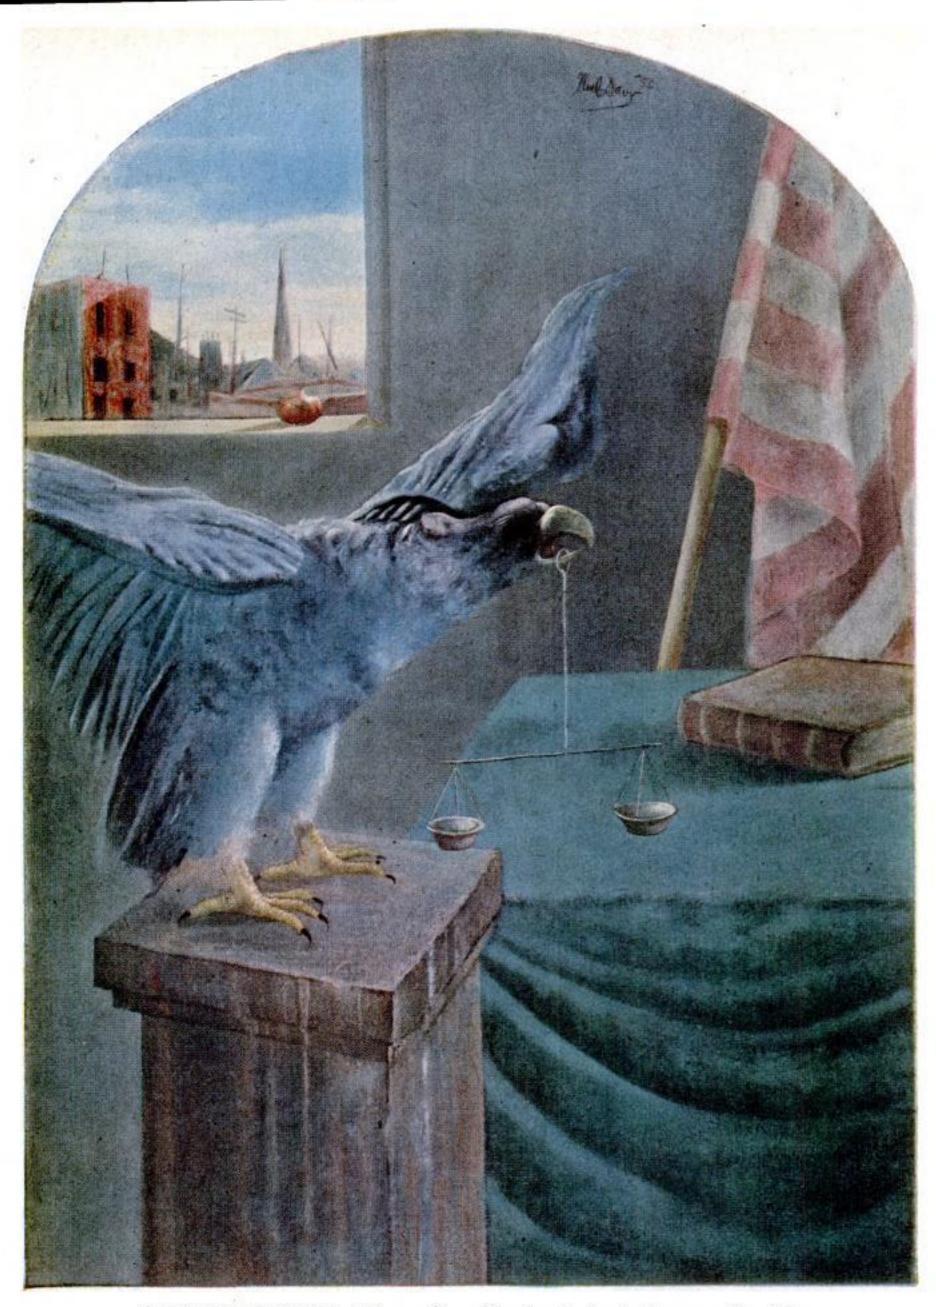

Look up — the Age of the Seven-Footer is coming. Better foods and medicines make your kids the healthiest, growingest kids in history! From antiseptics to vitamins, products made from oil help assure good health and vitality for coming generations.

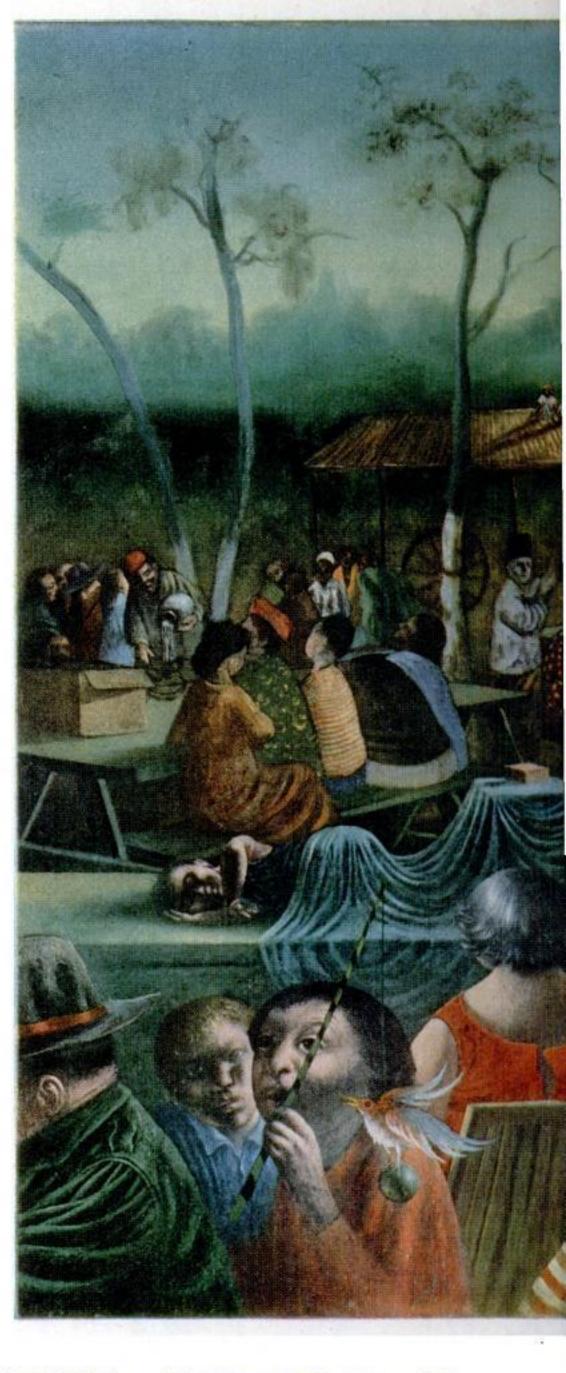

Sign of a better future for you

SOLITARY EAGLE holding scales of justice in its beak was painted by Davis after he observed a bronze eagle in an initiation ceremony of the Fraternal Order of Eagles in Milwaukee. Bible, flag and scales symbolize the society's record of promoting justice and social legislation in U.S.

LONELINESS IN NUMBERS

DAVIS SPORTS A COWBOY HAT WHILE PAINTING

Davis show reflects personal view of fraternal orders

Noel Davis, a 28-year-old New York artist, is fascinated by crowds. He has haunted Coney Island, circuses, carnivals and fairs, recording the spectacle of people who are bent on enjoying themselves. Six months ago Davis' interest found a new focus. Taking off across the country, he began an impromptu investigation of American fraternal organizations. The result of Davis' tour was hundreds of sketches and a dozen striking paintings, seven of which are reproduced here.

Though his paintings deal largely with festive occasions like parades and picnics or with colorful motifs of society rituals, they are permeated by an unusual mood of loneliness and depression which hauntingly conveys the artist's personal outlook. "There were a lot of nice people in the clubs," Noel Davis admits, "and they were doing some worthy things. But individuals somehow get lost in a crowd and when they do, they feel more alone than ever."

A resolute individualist, Davis has managed most of his life to avoid participating in group activities. The son of two artists, Floyd and Gladys Rockmore Davis, he attended art school for six months, then gave it up to study by himself "without teachers and students hovering around." The solitary training resulting from this decision was successful enough to win him two major art fellowships. At his recent one-man show in New York, critics praised his "extraordinary ability" but were perturbed by his joyless viewpoint.

The organizations which Davis took as his subject loom large in American social life, numbering 100 million men, women and children as members. The orders share a devotion to friendly gatherings, elaborate ritual and odd names—and to good works, which have eased and made happier the lives of thousands of Americans.

MOOSE PICNIC was sketched by Davis in Chicago's Riverview Park. Though a few revelers stir about and blow horns, most picnickers have settled down into a late-afternoon lethargy. The giant image of an Arab's head adorns the facade of the nearby amusement park. A million-member organization, the Loyal Order of Moose specializes in good works.

GRANGE FAIR was painted by Davis after he had visited the Tobacco Valley Community Fair in Eureka, Mont. He catches it here near end of day, with visitors drifting away from the emptying grounds. The National Grange, properly called The Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, has 900,000 farmer members. It is dedicated primarily to improving rural life.

A LONELY LODGE was painted by Davis from his own recollections of numerous aging brick buildings he saw while touring societies in the Middle West. To heighten loneliness he placed building against vast lake and added some wistful children who seem to have no spirit for games in such a cheerless setting.

odd Fellows Home in Ennis, Texas is supported as old folks' place by local chapters. Re-creating scene, Davis aimed at evoking "silence, sorrow and separateness" of inhabitants. Next to Masons, the Independent Orders of Odd Fellows is largest U.S. fraternal order, with a membership of 1.5 million.

PARADE OF RED MEN was held under palms of Sacramento, Calif. Despite tribal finery, Davis felt paraders seemed almost lost beneath towering trees. The Improved Order of Red Men is dedicated to preserving the traditions of American Indians, although there are few Indians among its 160,000 members.

MUTE MEMORIAL for deceased members of Knights of Pythias was created by Davis after attending one of society's services. Bible and drapery embroidered with "E" (for equality) are part of formal Knights' service. An organization of 250,000 members, Knights are proud of their ritual and patriotic ceremonies.

GARY, CARY REMAIN FRISKY PAST FIFTY

Mellow Romeos steam and swim

From one end of the country to the other last week youthful males sat sadly beside their girls in theaters and drive-ins and learned what a tremendous lot they had to learn about male charm. Before them on the big wide screens Cary and Gary, still gallantly frisky in their 50s, happily steamed out hangovers in Parisian Turkish baths and wiggled toes in swimming pools on superluxurious liners.

Gary Cooper was starring with Audrey Hepburn in Allied Artists' Love in the Afternoon, a complicated little comedy about a private eye, the private eye's daughter and a free-wheeling libertine on the loose at the Ritz in Paris. They find true love. Cary Grant was wrapped up with Deborah Kerr in 20th Century-Fox's An Affair to Remember, the story of a pair of hardheaded fortune hunters who foolishly, from a strictly financial point of view, take up with each other. They also find true love. Although Love in the Afternoon and An Affair to Remember contain little to remember as movies, they offer ample proof that, as romantic actors, the old boys are still pretty good at the game of love.

simmering gary, a fine figure of a man at 56, revives in a Turkish bath after an all-night fling. He is waving his arms in tune with the gypsy orchestra that follows him everywhere and musically sets mood for his romances.

and spry at 53, freshens up with a dip in a liner's pool after a night of ship-board romance. Keeping his mind off his girl friend of the evening before, he coyly flirts with his toes as he floats about the pool.

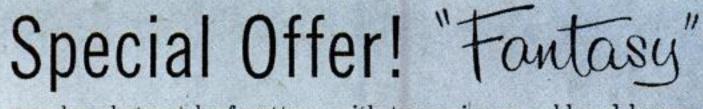

NOW A DUDE, Cooper, who broke into movies as a gun-packing cowboy 32 years ago, practices sophisticated dance with Audrey in his suite at the Ritz.

STILL A DANDY, Grant, a drawing room comedy star from the start of his movie career, practices a lighthearted dance with Deborah aboard the liner.

How to Have More Fun This Summer

There's no fun like the fun of going places in a brand new car, or a bright, late-model used car. The complete C.I.T. Time Purchase Plan makes it easy for you to drive the car you want now, while you pay for it out of current income. And you get all these extra protections and services, too:

The Best Car Insurance Service Offered Anywhere

Your car is insured against collision, fire, theft and many other causes of loss. And, in case of an accident, you don't have to shop for bids. Repairs can be made expertly by the man who knows your car best—your own car dealer. In addition, if your car should break down on the road, you are reimbursed for towing and roadside service—up to $10.

These protections also apply when you, or any relative living with you, use a borrowed passenger car.

Plus these Personal Protections and Services

First, your credit is established wherever you drive, so that if you should have an emergency car repair anywhere on the road, you simply request any of our offices to pay the bill. You repay in convenient monthly instalments when you return home.

Then, you get life insurance coverage, and while this policy is in effect, your family will own your car outright, without further payments, in the event of your death. In addition to credit life benefits, you get added insurance that will pay $1000 to your family if you lose your life in a traffic accident. Greater benefits may be paid if you should lose your life, or sight, or limbs in certain other kinds of traffic or travel accidents.

What's more, you get a bail bond certificate that provides you with bail bond up to $5,000 if you, or a member of your family, are arrested on traffic accident charges.

The Most Sensible Way to Buy

All of these protections* are yours when you buy your car on the complete C.I.T. Plan. And, anywhere you drive in the U. S. or Canada, there's one of C.I.T.'s 465 offices nearby, ready to give you immediate action and assistance on these protections.

Don't wait any longer. This week select the car you want to drive. Then ask your dealer to finance it on the complete C.I.T. Plan. In a few minutes, he'll make all the arrangements. And you'll protect your family, yourself and your car with the plan that helps you enjoy carefree driving.

GRIM WINNER, a tight-lipped Patterson poses in ring as his hands are raised in victory. During fight he was amused when Jackson tried to taunt him.

BOREDOM AFTER BATTLE

Floyd Patterson knew better than anyone else that his first defense of his heavyweight title had been only a cruel exercise in delivering punishment. For nearly 10 rounds in New York's Polo Grounds he pounded the pathetically inept challenger, Tommy ("Hurricane") Jackson, methodically slicing through his pawing defense (preceding page) until the referee stopped the fight. In his dressing room he seemed embarrassed to be talking about it with reporters. "I found him so easy to hit it became uninteresting," he admitted.

And at 22, the talented heavyweight champion had little of professional interest ahead of him. Having humiliated the fighter ranked as his number one challenger, he apparently had run out of worthy opponents almost before he had started. His next fight, on Aug. 22 in Seattle against inexperienced amateur heavyweight Pete Rademacher, offered him even less of a challenge—but a guarantee of $250,000.

STILL DEADPAN and unmarked after the fight, Patterson stands with Manager Cus D'Amato (left) and Emil Lence, who as promoter earned a small profit.

A loud color burst on the campus

College campuses, which will be more crowded than ever this fall because of record-breaking enrollments, will also be brighter than ever because of outfits like those shown at left. Within the traditional framework of Bermudalength shorts, tapered slacks, pleated skirts, crew-neck sweaters and mantailored shirts, designers have produced brashly colored sports clothes in patterns bold enough to be discovered across the length of the biggest football stadium. Scotch plaids are now horse-blanket size. There are enlarged versions in wool of cotton madras patterns. The smooth cashmere sweater is giving way to wiry-surfaced Shetland and alpaca weaves in eye-splitting hues, stripes and checks. Newest way to wear these clothes is with colored stockings or waist-high leotard tights, often with matching shoes. The very nervy girl will try stockings, shoes and dress for a single streak of color effect—like those on the girl in red standing at right in the group picture. But even the most brightly clad girl is likely to find herself matched by campus males (below).

MATCHING SWEATERS in fire-engine red Shetland look well on both boys and girls. Girl's "crazy" hat (William J., $17) is after-ski style now taken over for campus.

THE 1957 COLLEGE LINEUP

The outfits grouped around Jungle-Gym are: bottom row, from left, back-buttoned overblouse and pleated skirt (Sportwhirl, $39); slack suit (Sportwhirl, $38); checkerboard alpaca sweater ($30) with flannel Bermuda shorts ($13, both Masket); cotton shirt with striped tie and belt, pleated skirt (Reid & Reid, $22); bulky striped sweater (Gantner, $17), Bermuda shorts (Reid & Reid, $8); ribbed wool knit dress (Greta Plattry, $35), matching stockings (Bonnie Doon, $1.65); sleeveless overblouse, pleated skirt ($42) and silk shirt ($15, all Custom Craft). Second row, 'from left, corduroy jacket, short skirt worn over striped leotards (Haymaker, $28); patterned cardigan ($17), Bermuda shorts ($10, both Catalina); Argyle sweater ($23) and Bermuda shorts ($13, both Glen of Michigan); Shetland pullover (Premier, $11) with wool slacks (Cabana, $28); blanket wool Bermuda shorts, matching jacket (Chestnut Hill, $29) with Shetland sweater (Goldworm, $16); poplin shirt, Shetland sweater, wool madras slacks (Masket, $40); cotton play skirt, cotton knit sweater (Phil Rose, $12) worn over stretch-knit leotards (Lainette, $5). LOOKING LIKE A JAPANESE INN, BUILDING OF THE NEW MOTEL WHICH HOUSES DINING ROOMS AND KITCHENS RISES ON STILTS AT TOP OF A HILL

MOTEL HUNG ON A HILLTOP

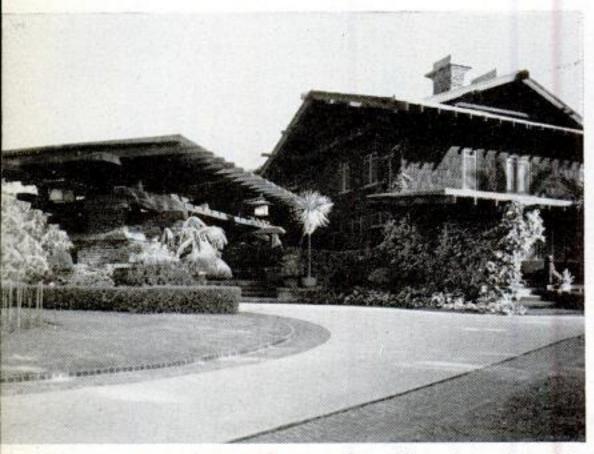

Airy, open, dancing on stilts, it epitomizes Japanese design in U.S.

As typically American as the flivver that put a nation on wheels is the highway motel that sprang up to serve the touring public. But the Motel on the Mountain, overlooking a welter of parkway traffic 30 miles from New York City, has almost nothing American about it except its name. Chief design adviser was a Japanese architect, Junzo Yoshimura, and the result is not only the largest and costliest but also one of the most exquisite examples of the evergrowing popularity of Japanese architecture in the U.S.

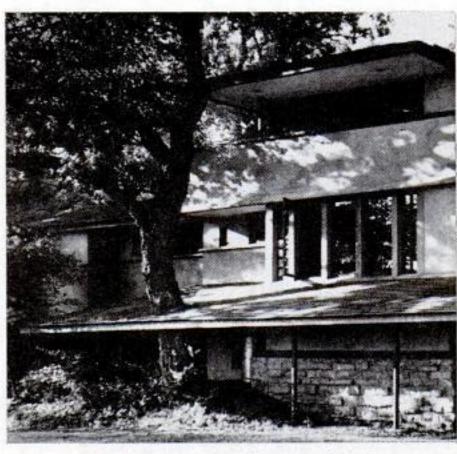

Yoshimura, a well-known Tokyo architect, came to the U.S. last year to design the main building (above). Taking advantage of the mountain site, which he found similar to those on which Japanese country inns are built, he designed a feathery-looking Japanese building which rises lightly from the crest of the hill. Here, where 500 people may dine among the treetops, are a bar and a series of dining rooms, made flexible in size by sliding shoji panels. Reached by a road that snakes across the face of the mountain, the motel's 14 buildings and connecting covered walks circle the hilltop. There are 84 luxurious bedrooms, a lake landscaped in Japanese style, a swimming pool and a pond with a waterfall. The features of Japanese architecture that have been most popular with American architects since the turn of the century (following pages) are brilliantly illustrated in the motel's varied roof levels, deep overhangs, exposed beams, balconies and graceful stilts, which make the buildings seem to dance on the edge of the cliffs.

SIX ADOPTED FEATURES.

EXPOSED BEAMS and wood used in this 1907 house by Charles and Henry Greene of Pasadena were first Japanese design features adapted for U.S.

BROAD OVERHANGS, often used in Japan as a shield from rain, are dramatized in Frank Lloyd Wright's Taliesin, begun in 1925, in Wisconsin.

UNITY OF HOUSE AND SITE, so important in Japan, is also favored by Richard Neutra. In this Ojai Valley house, he uses water to extend house.

HALF-CENTURY SPREAD OF JAPANESE DESIGNS

Signs of Japanese influence in U.S. architecture, which the Motel on the Mountain embodies, first appeared in houses designed on the West Coast by Charles and Henry Greene. Moving to California from M.I.T. in 1894, these brothers were impressed by the fad for everything Japanese, from objects of art to tea gardens. They began adapting Japanese construction in their designs, using big exposed beams and rafters as part of the architectural design and emphasizing the beauty of wood by using natural finishes indoors and out. Next to incorporate Japanese features in his architecture was Frank Lloyd Wright, who always treated his house and site as a unit and used big overhangs and low gabled roofs as the Japanese do.

Ever more quickly since World War II, the Japanese influence has spread throughout the U.S., until today almost all contemporary buildings in all parts of the country show some effects of Japanese design. Moreover, the U.S. building industry is learning to mass-produce modular parts, different in size from Japan's but based on the Japanese concept.

STAGGERED ROOFS of motel's low-gabled walks not only shelter visitors but, by following the contours of the hill, also help blend the motel into its mountain landscape. Instead of being covered with typical Japanese bark shingles, these roofs have sunreflecting white marble chips to help keep walks cool.

Never mind lessons...forget dull practicing... this is a new kind of organ...made for fun!

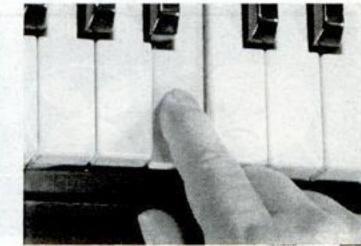

WITH MOST INSTRUMENTS, there's a long "breaking-in period" when you do little more than practice scales and do endless finger exercises.

Well, now, there's a wonderful new kind of home instrument you can play the very first time you try. A complete tune, mind you . . . start to finish . . . melody, chords, bass and all.

This surprising instrument is called the Hammond Chord Organ ... and you don't even have to know music, for Hammond gives you special "Picture Music." No lessons ... you teach yourself. No tedious practicing ... you progress by playing the kind of music you like.

Hammond Chord Organ

Here's why it's so easy to play

ONE FINGER of your left hand presses a button to play a full, rich chord. On any other keyboard instrument this would require three to five fingers. The Hammond Chord Organ does it with a single button! ONE FINGER of your right hand plays the melody. If you don't read notes, you follow Hammond's special "Picture Music." You sound great the first time you try... and you get better every time you play.

Home is the happiest place there is...when there's a Hammond Chord Organ in it. You'll find the kids staying home oftener... friends dropping in... the whole family gathering round for the most wonderful fun of all, the kind you share together. If you'd like to hear how "big" the Hammond Chord Organ sounds, send the coupon for a free LP recording of its music.

Easy terms . . . only $97.50 down at most dealers and about $29.50 a month

BROODING ON A ROCK, Yoshimura studied the motel site for weeks before sketching a line. This rock is now the focal point of the entrance court.

ARTIST IN NO HURRY

Architect Junzo Yoshimura, a professor at the Tokyo University of Arts, took his time designing the Motel on the Mountain's restaurant and helping landscape its grounds. Arriving in the U.S. in January 1956, he lived in one of the motel bedrooms—already completed in Japanese style by Harwell Harris-where he worked sitting on the floor surrounded by sketches. Finally he had a 40-foot-long scaffold built at the line where he had decided the dining room floor would be and spent days on it, working out the way to frame the most beautiful view for diners. To conceal air conditioning in the dining rooms, he had special Rama screens sent from Japan. To preserve the lines of the roofs, television aerials were placed under the motel's buildings. Adding a final delicate touch to the project, Yoshimura even found a special sea-washed gravel for the entrance courts of the motel's bedrooms.

EXPOSED FRAMEWORK was planned so connections of beams do not show. Costly fir beams were shaped in Oregon, erected still wrapped in paper.

Exciting new chapters will continue LIFE's portrayal of "Great Adventures." Fall issues will feature a new major series: "New Frontiers of Man's Achievements," which will look searchingly into the future. Early in '58 another series will delve into the past to re-create "The Winning of the American West." And at year's end you'll receive a special two-in-one issue on the single subject, "The American World."

But LIFE is a newsmagazine. It always is, regardless of what wealth of culture, history, adventure and sheer beauty continually is added to its pages. And because so much of any week's issue is devoted to news, no forecast of future issues can ever be complete.

Take last year's preview. When outlining the editorial highlights of late 1956 and early '57, we failed to foretell the Andrea Doria disaster or the sudden and heroic ditching of Flight 943 off California. We were unable to predict the incredible rebellion in Hungary or the historic circling of the globe by Air Force B-52s. And so we didn't promise what LIFE actually delivered—the finest photographic coverage of these memorable and climactic events anybody saw. But that's LIFE. You come to expect the unexpected of it. And that's what you can expect all through the weeks to come—important, surprise picture reports, along with an immense variety of planned features like those described on the following pages.

AHEAD IN LIFE: EIGHT GREAT SERIES

Right now LIFE's staff of 300 journalists is at work on hundreds of separate assignments, the best of which will help make future issues of LIFE the greatest reading value any magazine ever offered its subscribers. The great series sketched briefly here are just a sample. Also on the schedule of "bonus" features which will supplement LIFE's news coverage in the weeks ahead is LIFE's traditional salute to the Christmas season which will appear in the Dec. 16 issue and will reproduce a massive color portfolio by America's greatest illustrator of children's classics. And readers who remember LIFE's previous "double" issues on Christianity and The American Woman can look forward, at year's end, to a similar special issue on the single subject, "The American World." This edition will be studded with interesting people, exciting sights and astonishing achievements. It will give you the first comprehensive picture report on the impact and influence of America and Americans in virtually every nation of the world. You won't want to miss a single issue of LIFE in the year ahead. So why not subscribe-or renew your subscription-today by using the postpaid order form bound into this issue?

Added to the series illustrated here will be three major journalistic efforts to be published by LIFE early in 1958.

churchill's History: Completing his chronicle of the English-speaking Peoples, Sir Winston will appraise the War Between the States with an old soldier's judgment on the Civil War battles and generals who fought them. Three instalments superbly illustrated in full color.

part series documenting the staggering problems of the nation's colleges which, already jammed to capacity, must prepare to enroll twice as many students 10 years hence. If your children will be college age then—this is your problem now.

Winning of the West: More than 100 pages of paintings will illustrate the chapters in LIFE's series, "Winning of the West." Indian fighting, fur trading, Mormon emigration, discovery of gold, building the railroad—all will come alive in LIFE's panorama of the pioneer West.

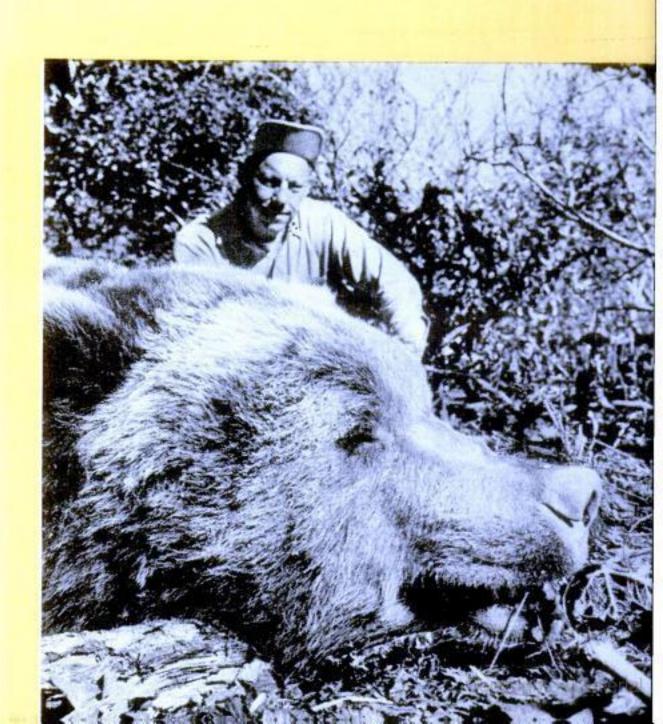

Beginning in the Sept. 9 issue, LIFE will launch an important new series, which in weekly instalments will examine the state of crime in the U.S., with a depth and thoroughness no other publication has ever attempted. The excitement and significance of the series—and its promise of spectacular photography—is hinted at by the tentative titles of each instalment: A Survey of Crime; A Big City Police Force; Laws and Courts and Judges; Prisons; Parole and Punishment; The Psychology of Crime; The White Collar Criminal. Each chapter will be built around the professional life of a famous American crime fighter and will be illustrated by LIFE's own photographers and by the painting of specially commissioned artists.

4AMERICAN FOLKLORE

For three years famous Artist James Lewicki has been illustrating some of America's great folk tales—Fountain of Youth, Hatfields and Mc-Coys, etc. His paintings will appear in a special LIFE series delighting Americans young and old.

FRONTIERS OF MAN'S ACHIEVEMENT

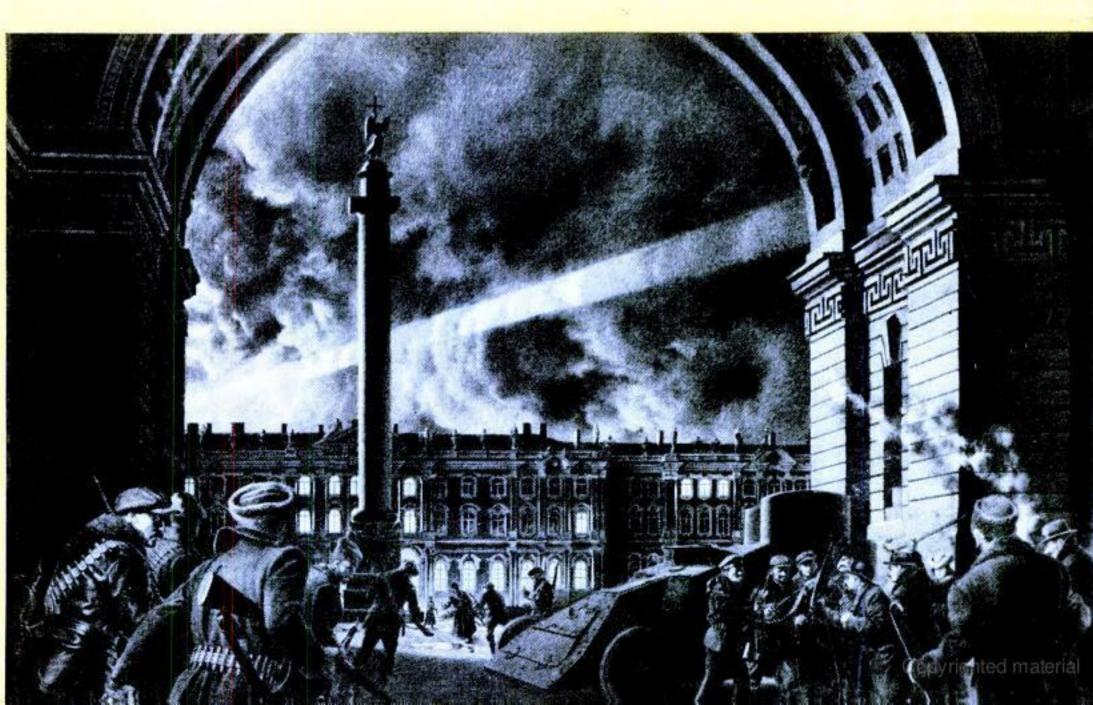

In thousands of laboratories throughout the country, yesterday's ideas are obsolete and today's ideas are obsolescent. Such is the hurtling speed of man's progress in physical sciences. Beginning in October, the editors of LIFE will document the wonders that have already been wrought by man's technology—the almost incredible achievements of our times that have already been accomplished in the laboratories and will soon be changing our daily lives. In chapters of 10 to 15 color pages each, LIFE will examine the newest in industrial techniques, machines and materials, in transportation, in health, in modes of living. LIFE will also take a realistic look at the psychological and physiological adjustments we will all have to make to partake of progress and prosper with it.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

In January 1958 Life will present "The Russian Revolution," a four-part serialization of the most concise and clearly presented history of one of the most important but least understood events of all time. Written by Alan Moorehead, a gifted author, and illustrated by color photography and the paintings of four famous artists, this series is based on Life-sponsored research and previously unpublished secret documents. These cast new light on the events that led to November 1917 when the Reds seized the rule of Russia. This series will make as much news as it reports.

GREAT ADVENTURES

Already in Life's color pages you have shared such widely varied adventures as a helicopter safari in Africa and an Atlantic crossing in a foldboat. Ahead in Life are equally exciting adventures: a breathtaking Land Rover trek from Nepal to Paris and a blood-chilling Kodiak bear hunt in Alaska.

BALTIMORE WOMEN SET OUT AT DAWN FOR A DOOR-TO-DOOR SOLICITATION FOR U.J.A.

AID FROM U.S TO ISRAEL

U.J.A.'s $100 million supports refugees

Generosity to the less fortunate has been an article of Jewish faith since the time of Moses. In the eyes of American Jews, this now means helping the swarms of persecuted Jewish refugees from Europe and the Arab world, for many of whom the one glowing hope is to get to Israel. America's vessel of generosity is a phenomenal private philanthropy called the United Jewish Appeal, which this year will raise $100 million to help Jewish refugees. As much again will be raised, largely through U.J.A., to support Jewish charities in the U.S. Although non-Jews contribute and aid in the campaign, the money comes largely from among the 5.2 million American Jews-a remarkably high level of per capita giving.

Few American Jews have chosen to move to Israel. Indeed, as Dr. George Steiner's article points out (pp. 108-120), they are divided on what their attitude, as Americans, should be toward Israel. But the majority agree on their obligations to help the refugees get there by supporting U.J.A. On these pages Life shows the intensive work of U.J.A.'s uniquely successful fund-raisers and the human evidence of what their dollars are accomplishing. This year's $100 million refugee goal was set last October by six U.J.A. leaders conferring in Israel during a tense moment in history. The Israeli-Egyptian battle, then beginning, portended a great new flood of immigrants to Israel from Egypt and the other Arab states, adding to the continuing human tide from Eastern Europe.

Over the years, since it was first formed in 1939 to help Jews escape from Nazi persecution, the U.J.A. has perfected a variety of fundraising techniques that embrace every segment of the Jewish community. Soon after the October meeting in Israel, these techniques were put to work in the U.S. (pp. 104, 105), and by midsummer the huge quota had been largely raised or pledged.

The U.J.A.'s money will help an estimated 110,000 refugees to reach and settle in Israel this year, an influx comparable to the arrival of 16 million new citizens in the U.S. It will help maintain other homeless Jews as they wait in forlorn camps for visas to other lands. And beyond what the money does for others, it gives to its donors a renewed sense of pride in their ancient faith and in their tradition of helping men who cannot help themselves.

THE MONEY IS RAISED-75 U.J.A. community leaders from Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio wave checks representing almost a million dollars in contributions at fund luncheon in Pittsburgh.

THE MONEY IS SPENT to help refugees like these, newly arrived at a farm in the Negev desert of Israel. U.J.A. agencies brought them to Israel, will aid them as they work to make a barren land bloom.

THE TELEPHONE TECHNIQUE is used by Abraham Solovioff, business manager for a soft drink workers' local, to lure an associate to U.J.A. meeting.

"You're making money," he says. "I'll tell them to send you 12 tickets." He was working at "telephone meeting" of New York carbonated beverage division.

THE STRONG PITCH TO BIG DONORS

U.J.A.'s campaign embraces the whole Jewish community, from school-children who give pennies a week to philanthropists whose annual gifts run to six figures. The heart of the drive's success lies in the big, special gifts. In New York this operation is organized by industries, with union men (opposite page) often working closely with management.

Over the years the appeal has perfected a special technique, "the telephone meeting." Leading men in industry call their friends on a battery of phones ("If you call people cold, you might just as well have a battery of girls on a board"). The talk is urgent and plain-spoken, appealing not only to U.J.A. needs but to the donor's pride in his religion and economic standing: "Sy has gone from $10,000 last year to $50,000 this year. What about you? A gift announcement from you means something. The hell with business. Saving lives comes first. Get over here and make some phone calls." Phone calls lead to personal visits and then to fund-raising banquets at which donors stand proudly to announce their gifts. By such techniques New York alone this year is getting an impressive $28 million.

MAKING THE APPEAL to Louis Glickman, Carnegie Hall owner, Jack Weiler (left) of Greater New York U.J.A.'s real estate division outlines refugees' needs.

APPEAL PAYS OFF as Weiler (at the podium) hears Glickman announce at a dinner meeting that he will give $25,000 to the regular U.J.A. fund and $10,000 to the emergency refugee rescue fund while his wife will give $1,000. The real estate division is raising $2.5 million of the New York area's $28 million quota.

FOUNDRYMAN Thomas Cook, Ann Arbor, Mich., is giving a third ($6,000) of his income to U.J.A.

U.J.A. PRESIDENT Morris Berinstein of Syracuse has to let work of his furniture chain pile up.

STOREKEEPER Sam Feldman of New York adds coins to those of customers, sends U.J.A. $60 a year.

A PROMISE OF HOPE

The funds that U.J.A. leaders and their thousands of campaign workers had struggled so hard to collect are distributed eventually to Jews like Aaron Omessi and his family.

Last September Omessi was one of 50,000 Jews living in Egypt. He was a chemical importer in Alexandria, comfortably set with a big apartment, a car and two servants. His wife was about to bear their third son. Then the government suspended his import license. As a Jew he could get no other work and, when the Israeli-Egyptian war broke out, it became clear he would never get back his import license. He and his family had to leave Egypt. They decided to head for Israel, not as idealists eager to help build a new nation but as refugees who had no other place to go.

The Jewish refugee agencies cannot operate in Egypt, but in April, after weeks of anxious waiting, the Omessis were able to sail for Athens aboard a ship chartered by the Red Cross. There, with thousands of other displaced Jews, they were taken in charge by the Jewish Agency, one of the organizations supported largely by U.J.A. The agency housed and fed them and, after weeks more of waiting, put them on a ship for Haifa. Now, through the help of fellow Jews he will never meet, Omessi is awkwardly but optimistically learning his role in fulfilling the new promise of a promised land.

LEADERS OF U.J.A. and its member agencies stand before a mural of debarking refugees. U.J.A. Cotreasurer Jacob Sincoff (1) holds $12 million in checks, a month's disbursements to four beneficiary agencies. The others shown include: Dewey Stone (2), chairman of the United Israel Appeal; Rose Halprin (3), acting chairman of Jewish Agency for Palestine; Mrs. Walter Hirsch (4), vice president of New York Association for New Americans; Moses A. Leavitt (5), executive vice chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee; William Rosenwald (6), the general chairman of U.J.A., and Rabbi Herbert Friedman (7), executive vice chairman of U.J.A.

ONE FAMILY'S ODYSSEY.

LEAVING Athens, where they had been brought by Red Cross, Omessi goes through interview on shipboard.

CONSOLING his frightened and tearful wife, Odette, Omessi embraces her at rail as ship heads for Haifa.

PRAYING before going to work his first day, Omessi dons prayer shawl for few moments of scripture reading.

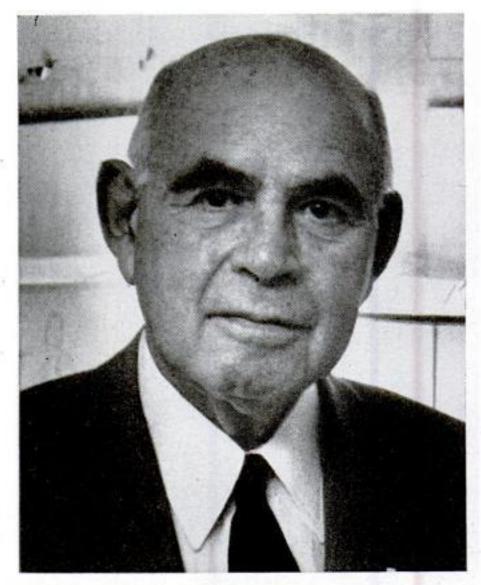

TOGETHER, the Omessis sit at sundown by the door of their home. Odette is learning to do housework.

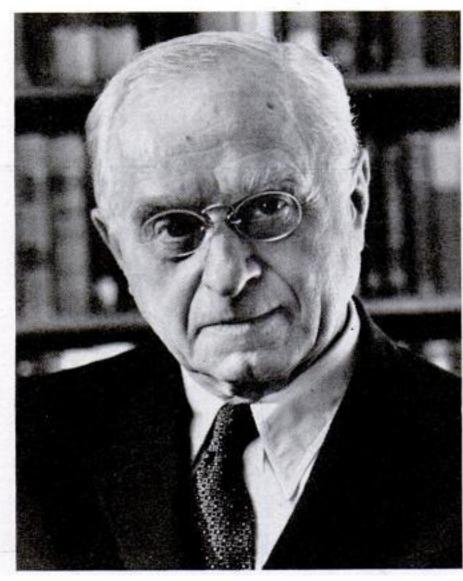

ADJUSTING TO A NEW LIFE, Omessi, who had always been an office worker, still wears a city man's clothes as he awkwardly half-squats in the broiling desert sun to try to prune a grapevine. Of three alternatives in Israel, all offering little but hard work and risk, Omessi deliberately chose to join a farm settlement, or moshav, where he would at least have a home and seven acres of his own and receive about $9 a day for his labors in the vineyard and other projects.

PROMINENT JEWS like the six men who are shown above typify the wide range of personality and outlook among the 5.2 million members of the Jewish

by GEORGE STEINER

THERE is an old saying: "Take six Jews and you will find seven points of view." Whatever its truth, one thing is certain: no one, neither former Senator Lehman nor Mr. Bernard Baruch nor the late Albert Einstein, could ever speak, or has ever attempted to speak, in the name of the 5.2 million American Jews. It cannot be done. The American Jewish community is too complex, too immensely varied to be considered as a single unit or body of opinion. There are in the U.S. at least a dozen major Jewish national organizations, in addition to United Jewish Appeal, which express varying attitudes and devote themselves to a wide variety of political and social ends. There are nearly 40 major groups concerned with different facets of Jewish culture. In terms of religion, American Jews range from severest orthodoxy to extreme reform. There is no such thing as "the American Jew." There is Admiral Strauss and there is Hank Greenberg, Justice Frankfurter and Governor Ribicoff, Arthur Miller and Phil Silvers. And yet there is perhaps one generalization that can be made: of all the millions of Jews in the U.S. there can be only a few who have not been affected, in one way or another, by the creation of Israel. They disagree violently about what Israel means, or should mean, to an American Jew. They discuss the problem of Zionism in radically different ways. But wherever you meet them—whether in New York City, the largest Jewish community on earth, or in Los Angeles, whether among Jewish businessmen in Richmond or among rabbinical students in Chicago—you will find Israel looming large in their consciousness.

The more extreme positions can be clearly defined. The American Zionist Council, which claims to have some 750,000 members, believes that American Jews have a major stake in the survival and prosperity of Israel. It sees no difficulty in being loyal to the U.S. and giving active financial and political support to Israel, even in those moments when the foreign policies of President Eisenhower and Israeli Premier Ben-Gurion are heading in opposite directions. As spokesmen for the American Zionist Council see it, those very Jews who are proudest of being Americans and whose religious communities best fit the American setting are also the staunchest backers of Israel.

At the other extreme is the American Council for Judaism, which numbers fewer than 20,000 members. This group is profoundly opposed to Zionism and deplores the view that American Jews should develop any kind of special identification with Israel. Its basic proposition is that Judaism "is a religion of universal values, not a nationality." What the council seeks for Americans of Jewish faith is their "increasing civic, cultural and social integration into the life of the United States." The council's argument may be summed up like this: those American Jews who associate themselves with the cause of Israel are playing straight into the hands of anti-Semitism and the old myths about a "Jewish race." Israel is a foreign state and should be regarded as such. American Jews should guard against arousing latent suspicion that a Jew will always be a Jew first and an American second; that is exactly what Hitler meant when he bellowed attacks on "international Jewry." Those Jews who take literally the traditional Passover wish, "next year in Jerusalem," are deliberately fostering the tradition of exile and alienation which plagued their ancestors before they found a new home in the United States.

Obviously most American Jews adopt neither this argument of the Council for Judaism, whose principal spokesman has long been Lessing Rosenwald, nor the equally been Lessing Rosenwald, nor the equally extreme point of view of the Zionist Council. Instead they often take a middle road. Organizations such as the American Jewish Committee, with its 26,000 members, concentrate on obtaining total economic and political equality for Jewish minorities throughout the world and on "alleviating the consequences of persecution." This puts them in direct contact with Israel but does not commit them to active or unvarying support of Israeli policies. Nevertheless, although most American Jews would find it difficult to define their relationship to Israel in precise words, the fact remains that the American Jewish community does give support to Israel, and with ever increasing firmness and generosity.

LESSING ROSENWALD

The figures are dramatic: in 1957 the United Jewish Appeal is now carrying out its 19th annual campaign, and in some peacetime years it has raised more money than the American Red Cross. The total collections since 1939 have been over $1 billion. In 1948, when Israel achieved nationhood, U.J.A. raised $148 million. Over the last five years donations have totaled between $55 and $72 million a year. Contrary to general supposition, the money does not go directly into the treasury of Israel. It is used to help needy Jews everywhere in the world. Most of it, however, helps new immigrants reach Israel and provides them with a minimum foothold once they get there. And because of that connection the history of U.J.A. is a sensitive index to the extent of pro-Israel feeling among American Jews.

But the American Jews are doing far more than simply helping persecuted Jews from Morocco, Hungary and Egypt start a new life in the factories of Tel Aviv or on the farms of Galilee. They are investing in the future of Israel as such. Over the past five years Americans have bought more than one million State of Israel bonds to the value of about $300 million. Already bondholders have collected about $17 million in interest. Finally, there is a growing amount of private American investment in Israeli enterprises, ranging from breweries to oil wells.

One further fact should be emphasized: whenever Israel is in danger, American Jews increase their support. On Sept. 27, 1955 Moscow concluded its arms deal with Nasser and in that same autumn the crisis in North Africa made it imperative for Moroccan Jews to flee to Israel. At once the American Jewish community responded and funds poured into U.J.A. The same was true during the fall and winter of 1956-57. When Premier Ben-Gurion openly opposed President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles over the occupation of Egyptian territory, some experts believed that American Jews would bide their time and hesitate before contributing—even indirectly—to a nation at odds with their own. The contrary happened: on a single day during the crisis U.J.A. received pledges totaling over $2 million. During the same period the sale of bonds rose markedly. That was the answer of American Jews to the threat of economic sanctions against Israel.

Why is it that millions of American Jews support the general cause of Israel even though they may not feel themselves committed to the historical tradition and politics of Zionism? Upon what emotional urges are they acting?

Here again one must guard against generalizations. There may be as many answers as there are individual Jews in the U.S. All one can do is to outline the broader psychological patterns.

The status of Jews in America

TEWS have achieved in the U.S. a position higher than that reached by Jews as a group in most other countries. They have contributed distinguished members to the President's Cabinet and to the Supreme Court. There are, at present, two Jewish senators, Javits and Neuberger, and there are a number of Jewish congressmen, several of whom hold high-ranking committee positions. Connecticut has a Jewish governor; Jews occasionally represent the U.S. in important embassies abroad. Moreover, the economic power of the American Jews is great in proportion to their number, though difficult to measure exactly. It extends from some of the most active investment banking firms in Wall Street through important industries such as the manufacture and distribution of garments to a significant influence in the media of mass communication—radio, motion picture and television companies and certain influential newspapers. The Jews are undeniably the most prosperous and politically conscious minority in the U.S.

But the key word in that statement is "minority." For many an American Jew still feels the sting of discrimination. And precisely because they have achieved so much, such Jews are doubly sensitive to the many barriers still in their way. Even in the U.S. a Jew sometimes meets with attitudes and prohibitions that have haunted his people since their dispersal from ancient Israel. There are communities and residential areas in which a Jew is not allowed to build his home. There are jobs in politics, industry and academic life to which he cannot aspire. There are clubs to which he will not be admitted. Some schools and universities allow only a strict quota of Jewish students.

American anti-Semitism is scarcely as virulent as it was a generation or two ago. But it can still be found. And because of its existence alongside the many ameliorations of Jewish life in the U.S., the American Jew sometimes resents his minority status all the more fervently.

This is where his attitude toward Israel enters the picture. After millennia of persecution or grudging tolerance in alien lands, Jews can once again look to a place on the earth where they rule. Premier Ben-Gurion has restored to the imagination of Jews everywhere something of the Mosaic image—the proud remembrance of a time when Israel was a majestic people which gave Western man his greatest book and his major religions. The day Israel offered, with a perfectly straight face, to exchange 5,800 captured Egyptians for four captured Israelis, there was not a Jew who read about it without carrying his head a little higher. Somehow Israel's victories and growing prosperity are mirrored in the image that a Jew has of himself. Even in the U.S. his own life gains something in stature and self-respect.

Two historical facts have crystallized this attitude: the death of six million Jews in German gas ovens and the emergence of Israel to national independence. In a very real sense each Jew, wherever he may live, carries with him a piece of that yellow star which European Jews were forced to wear under the rule of the Gestapo. "There but for the grace of God go I and my family" is what many an American Jew said to himself. And out of the horror grew the sense of community, the awareness that being a Jew is something strangely different from merely belonging to a particular religious denomination. One did not need to know Hebrew to qualify for Buchenwald.

Then in 1948 Israel became a nation. This could not compensate for the near destruction of European and Russian Judaism. But it PHILIP meant a second life for those who had survived the inferno of Hitler's Europe and a potential haven for those who might find themselves in peril of future persecution.

Pride and a reawakened sense of historical tradition combine in complex ways to explain the pro-Israel sentiments of the overwhelming majority of American Jews. That these sentiments exist and that they are expressed in terms of tremendous financial support for Israel is clear. But does this mean that the 5.2 million Jews in the United States influence American policy toward Israel? That is an extremely difficult and controversial question. The problem is that "influence" is an intangible substance and that it is nearly impossible to say with certainty of any given act of American foreign policy whether it has or has not been undertaken as a result of Jewish pressure.

The puzzle of the 'Jewish vote'

T the heart of the puzzle lies the problem of the "Jewish vote." Pro-Arab spokesmen, such as the American Friends of the Middle East, have long voiced the suspicion that American policies toward Israel are motivated by the fact that both the Democrats and the Republicans try to obtain Jewish support in key states. In particular, it has often been argued that the strongly pro-Israel attitudes of the Roosevelt and Truman administrations reflected the conviction of Democratic strategists that they needed the Jewish vote to carry New York State. But other observers disagree and contend that American Jews vote not as Jews but as Democrats or Republicans, as inhabitants of Boston or San Diego, as white collar workers or manual laborers. Finally, there are political scientists who believe that we lack adequate statistics to show whether there is in fact such a thing as the "Jewish vote" or whether it is simply a myth which politicians still believe in.

We do not, admittedly, have enough information on American electoral trends and voting habits to give a definitive answer. But certain generalizations can safely be made. In New York State professional politicians regard a measure of pro-Zionism as a law of survival. In close presidential and congressional elections New York and other urban centers in which Jews are concentrated may determine the margin of victory. Hence both the Democrats and the Republicans include more or less specific endorsements of Israel in their party platforms. Furthermore it is plain that frequently Jews tend to vote for a Jewish candidate irrespective of his party. This seems to be a factor of such importance that it holds true even for Jewish candidates whose party happens to be opposed to Israel's foreign policy. To give one recent example, Republican senatorial candidate Jacob Javits won in New York State over his non-Jewish opponent last November, even though President Eisenhower's Administration was, at that precise moment, demanding that Israel withdraw from Egypt, and even though Secretary Dulles was weighing the use of economic sanctions against the Ben-Gurion government.

But the Jewish politician is obviously the special case. Where he is given a choice of non-Jewish candidates, the Jewish voter will decide not solely on the basis of the respective party platforms on Israel, but he will definitely take these into account. Politicians know it and act upon their knowledge. This emerged dramatically during the congressional debates over economic sanctions. Senators Ives and Javits opposed such sanctions, at least in part, presumably, with an eye toward their New York State constituents. Senator Knowland's position was more complicated: not only does California have a fairly large Jewish population, but for a man with

From Research comes TRUTH

Penetrating Medical Studies to determine speed of pain relief without stomach upset-confirm:

BAYER brings Fastest Relief

... the fastest-acting, most gentle-to-thestomach relief you can get

TRUTH based on 3 years' research

In 1954, as part of a continuing research versus aspirin with a 'buffer' added. project in the field of pain relief, BAYER sought the aid of one of America's foremost analgesic authorities, whose work is centered in several large New York clinics.

This specialist began a series of clinical tests to compare the action of BAYER Aspirin

Thousands of tests were made on patients actually suffering pain . . . the findings were analyzed and corroborated beyond any doubt. Throughout three years, the results verified that BAYER is the safest, gentlest, fastest-acting pain reliever you can buy.

TRUTH |- confirmed ...

BAYER called for further tests, further evidence. This new research was conducted by members of the staff of one of the East's prominent Medical Schools.

Again and again, BAYER and aspirin with a 'buffer' added were tested clinically to determine speed of pain relief without stomach upset . . . tested on people suffering from many types and degrees of acute pain suffered daily by millions.

Again, the results were the same . . . adding further confirmation that ever-dependable BAYER Aspirin is still the safest, fastest, gentlest pain reliever you can get!

TRUTH __confirmed again!

To climax its relentless search for the truth about pain relief, BAYER requested an eminent professor of a renowned Mid-Western Medical School to undertake a new study of people in actual pain. The two pain relievers were again compared under true pain conditions. The findings of this third study were overwhelming and indisputable!

Hundreds of pain-ridden patients in the three independent studies verified over and over again that BAYER is still the safest, most reliable antidote for pain in medical history. You can trust your body to BAYER to feel better fast.

THIS RESEARCH is based on the one final and absolute method for testing the value of pain relieversby studying people suffering from real pain.

presidential ambitions the opinion of American Jews could become very important. The same thought may well have struck Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas. Johnson is one of the top leaders in the Democratic party and the Democrats have a tradition of regarding Jewish support as necessary for national victory.

It should not be overlooked that the American Jewish community makes itself heard not only at the polls. There are a great many Jewish writers, impresarios and performers-men skilled in presenting ideas and summoning emotions. Whenever Israel is threatened, the voice of Jewish feeling is heard eloquently in the full-page advertisements of leading newspapers and over the loudspeakers at well-attended rallies in New York's huge Madison Square Garden. This flair for public relations must be taken into account when one tries to say just how much pressure, political and indirect, American Jews can bring to bear on Washington officials in defense of Israel.

Had the United Nations voted for economic sanctions against Israel during the winter of 1956-57 and had President Eisenhower gone along with that decision, there would have been a fascinating showdown. Then one might have seen just how influential the feelings of American Jews are and how far politicians in Washington are willing to go to satisfy those feelings. But the marshaling of forces never took place.

Some changes in official attitudes

LL the available evidence suggests, however, that the capacity of American Jews to influence U.S. policy toward Israel was not so great as the Arabs fear and certainly not so great as many pro-Zionists would like to believe. This makes it possible to understand the changes in emphasis in official attitudes toward Israel which have occurred in Washington since the Eisenhower Administration took over in 1953.

Both because of the considerable importance which they attached to the "Jewish vote" and through personal beliefs, President Roosevelt and President Truman pursued an openly pro-Israel policy in the Middle East. The Arabs have never forgiven Mr. Truman for taking only 11 minutes to recognize the new state of Israel on the very day it achieved national sovereignty. But in so doing, the President was simply heralding the successful accomplishment of a dream which the Democratic party had always viewed with sympathy.

In Republican Washington the atmosphere is rather different. Not that the fundamental policy has been reversed: as Mr. Dulles assured some congressmen on Feb. 6, 1956, U.S. foreign policy continues to regard "the preservation of the State of Israel" as a matter of high priority. And President Eisenhower himself has said time and again that the U.S. would not allow Israel to be swept into the sea or be economically strangled. But—and this is the crucial point—Israel no longer enjoys a unique position in State Department atlases. The Arab world has come to loom much larger, and the present Administration prides itself on its ability to look on Arab-Israeli conflicts with impartiality.

There are many reasons for this change. Middle East oil means a great deal to the Western world; the "Jewish voter" seems to

Telephone Ambassador-at-Large

He serves his community on and off the job

Tall, rangy Bob Croushore is a mighty familiar figure in Greensburg, Pa. As a telephone man, he gets to meet and talk with people all around town. And that suits Bob right down to the ground because his big interest in life happens to be people.

Bob says, "I like to think that the folks around here count on me for good dependable telephone service." He takes professional pride in putting in new telephones and in providing additional telephones wherever they are needed.

Bob Croushore's job and his spare-time activities both revolve around Greensburg's community life. He is a charter member and president of the fire department, a deacon in his church, and a member of the Greensburg Lions Club. And his friends in the farm areas made him a director of the fair.

It seems that the telephone business was partly responsible for bringing Bob and his wife Elizabeth together. Mrs. Croushore, before her marriage, was a telephone operator.

All over the country, people like the Croushores are helping to make your telephone service even better and more convenient.

have given President Eisenhower a good measure of support despite his Middle Eastern policies; and above all, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles regard the Arab world as strategically vital in the larger struggle against Russian penetration and expansion. If the Arabs turn to Russia out of hatred of Israel and of Israel's Western allies, then, argues the President, a vital area of the world may be lost to us and World War III may become inevitable. Hence the insistence of the U.S. that Israel evacuate Gaza and Aqaba; hence the early American support for Colonel Nasser; and hence the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine.

Finally, the White House and the State Department believe that the fanatical antagonism of the Arabs toward Israel is perpetuated by the economic backwardness of the Arab nations. If the Arabs are to see the continued existence of Israel with a saner and more mature vision, their economic lot must be improved, the problem of their 900,000 refugees must be solved to their satisfaction and their genuine fear of Israeli aggrandizement must be allayed. Moreover, as Assistant Secretary of State Allen put it in January 1956, the Israelis "cannot expect to have indefinitely, plane for plane, and gun for gun, as large an armaments position as that of 40 million Arabs."

Suez, Saud and ships

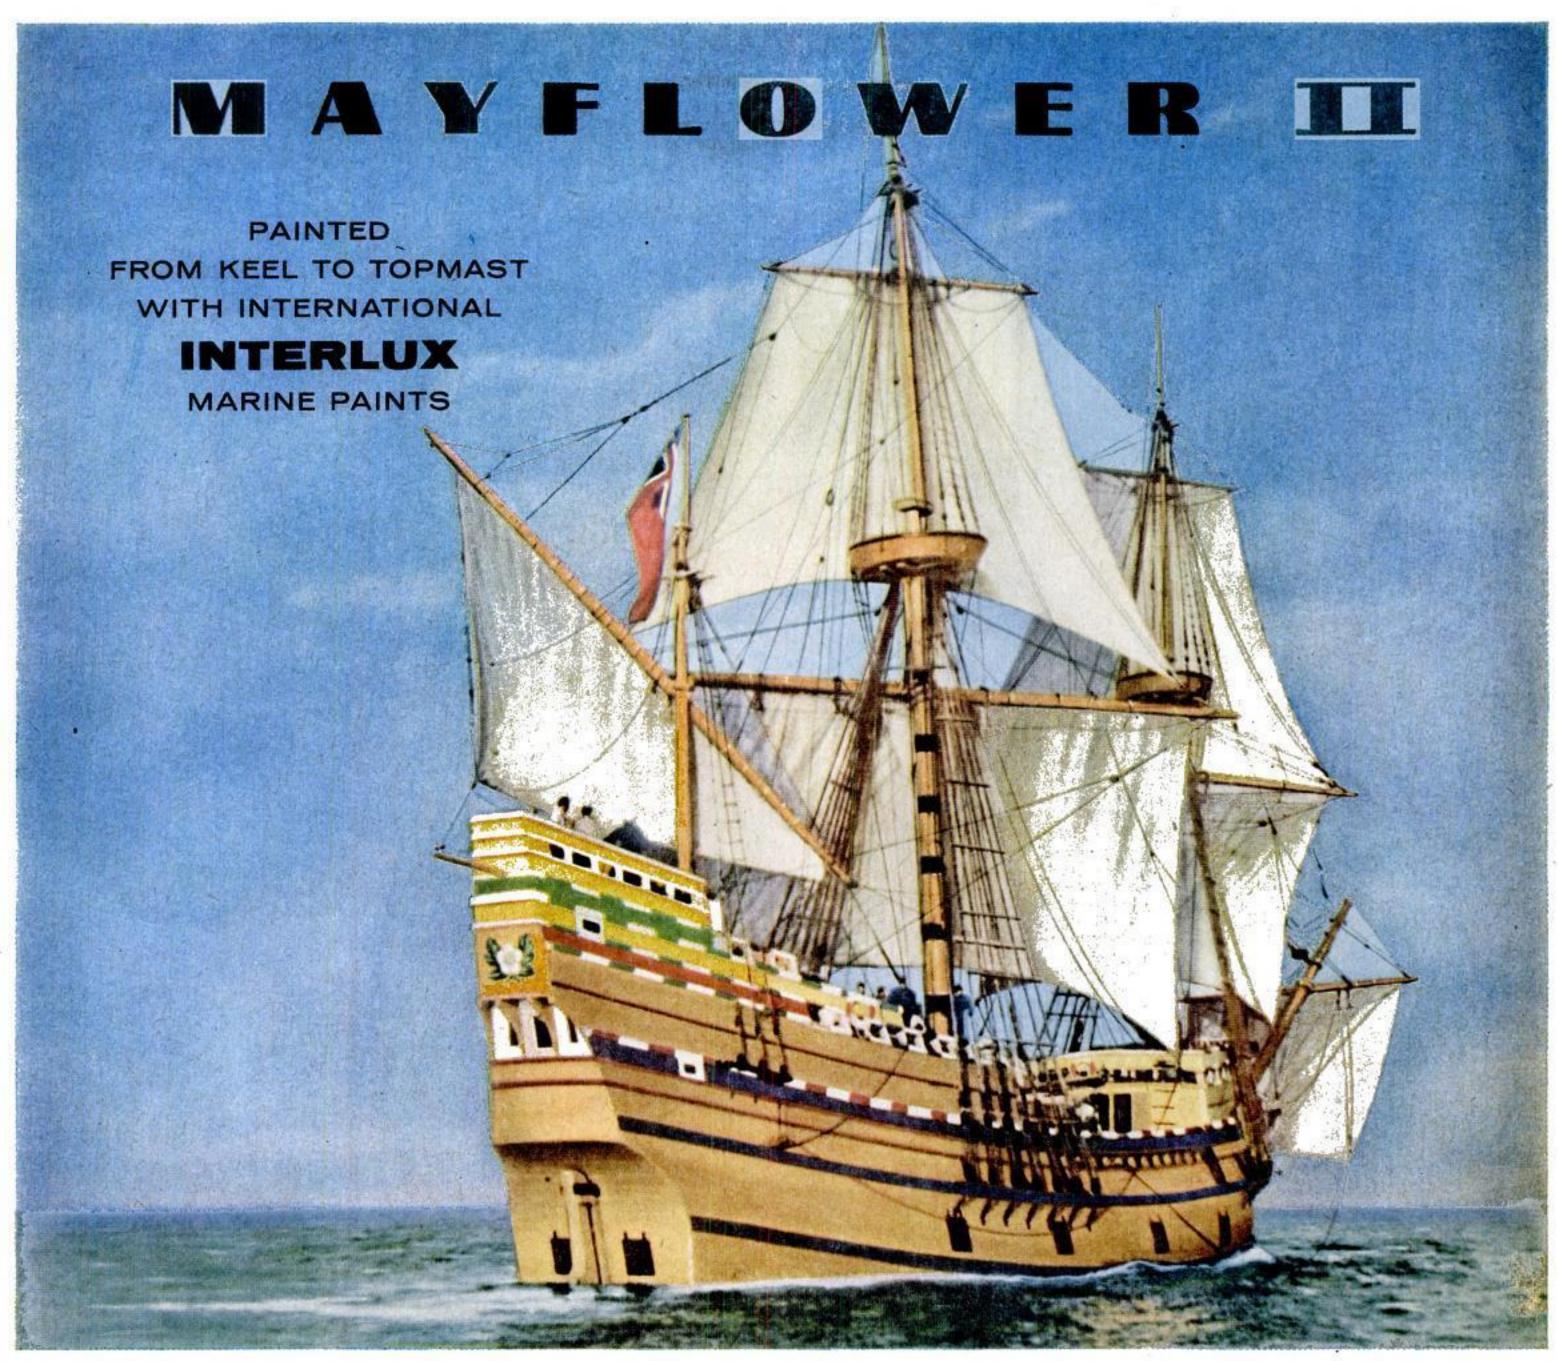

HESE have been the principles of the Eisenhower policy toward Israel and they explain many of the events of last winter. It is easy to see that they run counter to the hopes and wishes of pro-Zionists in America. And many American Jews who would not regard themselves as committed to Zionism also deplored the President's policy on the Suez invasion and his welcome to King Saud. They tend to feel that it is naive to trust to the good intentions of the Arab leaders and that in the final analysis Israel is the only true democracy—and the only true U.S. ally—in the Middle East. Above all, they argue that it was folly to clear the Suez Canal without insisting at the same time on free passage for Israeli ships. As one observer wrote in the Jewish monthly, Commentary, "When the 'integrity and independence' of a petty kingdom like Jordan is officially declared to be 'vital' to American interests, while at the same time Egyptian dictation is accepted at Suez, one may wonder whether the policymakers have a clear sense of the relative importance of the issues at stake."

But whatever the merits of the case, it is plain that the foreign policies of the Eisenhower Administration are fairly immune to pressure from American Jews. Perhaps one could sum up the whole complex situation in this way: under a Democratic administration our policies toward Israel tend to be influenced by the effect that they will have on the U.S. domestic scene. When Republicans are in the White House, our policies tend to be influenced more by the over-all world situation and less by the effect that they will have at home.

The question of U.S. relations with Israel is always one of relative emphasis and will continue to be so as long as there are 40 million Arabs in the strategic Middle East confronting 1.6 million Jews in Israel—and 5.2 million Jews in America. This is what Mr. Hal Lehrman, a shrewd student of American-Israeli relations, may have meant when he said that U.S. policies toward Israel necessarily had in them something of a "split personality."

BETWEEN DANCES GUESTS AT THE TIFFANY BALL FORSAKE THE GOLD BALLROOM OF NEW

NEWPORT PAST IS RENEWED

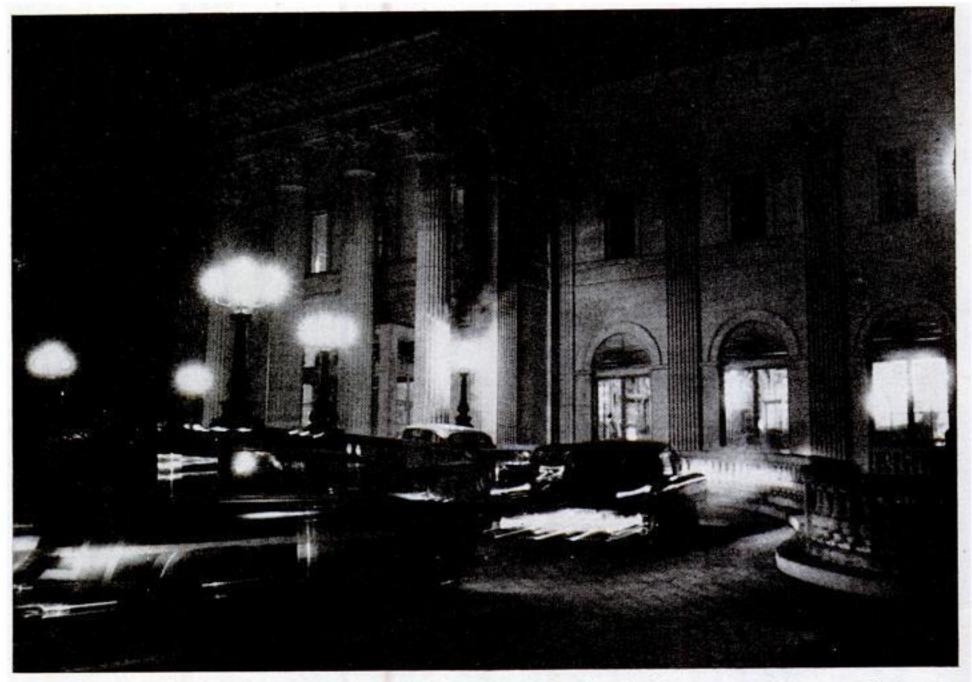

A Tiffany Ball lights up Marble House

In 1895 there were 300 live hummingbirds hovering around an indoor fountain in honor of the Duke of Marlborough's visit to the $9 million Marble House built in Newport, R.I. by William K. Vanderbilt, grandson of Commodore Vanderbilt. This summer Marble House, which like many sumptuous Newport estates has been closed in recent years, glittered briefly again, although no hummingbirds were present. The occasion was the benefit Tiffany Ball attended by 1,200 members of East Coast society, resplendent in jewelry valued at an estimated $20 million. The purpose of the benefit was to raise money for restoration of some 400 17th and 18th Century buildings in Newport County. Sponsored by Tiffany's, which furnished a $12,000 table service and a $600,000 diamond, the ball netted $30,000. By 3:30 a.m. the dance in Marble House was over, the lights were out, and it became again a 34-room monument to a flamboyant past.

OLD FRIENDS' REUNION in Central Hall is between Mrs. John R. Drexel III, Senator and Mrs. John Kennedy. Kennedys were married in Newport.

HUGE GEM, the largest yellow diamond in world, valued at $600,000, was loaned by Tiffany's to honorary chairman of ball, Mrs. Sheldon Whitehouse.

VANDERBILT DESCENDANT, Countess Szapary, the granddaughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt II, came with count. She was only Vanderbilt at ball.

PACKED BALLROOM had dance music continuously from 10:30 to 3:00 a.m. Called the gold room, it is the most elaborate in the 65-year-old mansion.

A WATER SKIER'S COOL COMMUTE

For most commuters summer is the season of stifling trains and sweltering crowds. But for Don Ibsen it is one time when going to work is a pleasure. It hardly seems a coincidence that Ibsen is a manufacturer's representative who sells water sports equipment. He lives on Lake Washington in a suburb of Seattle and does business at marinas across the lake. Properly dressed for his work, he wears a hat and carries a briefcase, but he hangs his shoes around his neck. Then he steps onto a pair of water skis, clutches the tow handle in one hand and a speedboat driven by his son pulls him three miles across the lake. He arrives a little wet, but refreshed and invigorated.
